Paul M. Pennick

Paul McNeel Penick

NOT the least important part of an educational institution is the proper administration of its finances. Its success or failure is, among other things, dependent upon the efficiency with which its financial and business affairs are handled.

At Washington and Lee University the Treasurer is at once collector, paymaster, purchasing agent, and a dozen other functionaries all combined into one. And with the increase in the size of the school, his duties show no signs of becoming less multitudinous. Apparently there are few subjects on which he is not called on to pass judgment or to give advice. The demands thus made upon this official are many and varied and require such qualifications as are possessed by few. Indeed, in these times, when "filthy lucre" has been the means of corrupting many, the need is doubly felt for men whose motto is something else than, "The smell of money is good, from whatsoever source it comes". Or, as Juvenal puts it,

"Lucri bonus est odor ex re Qualibet".

In the spring of 1913, Mr. John Lyle Campbell, who had been the efficient Treasurer of the University for thirty-six years, passed to his reward. The Board of Trustees were thus confronted with the task of selecting his successor. Realizing the difficulty of filling the position thus left vacant and not wishing to experiment with unknown quantities, the Board elected one of its own number, Mr. Paul McNeel Penick, who was then associated with Mr. Frank T. Glasgow, another member of the Board, in the practice of law in Lexington. At the earnest solicitation of the University officials, Mr. Penick consented to accept the responsibilities of the Treasurer's office. In the firm conviction that he was increasing his sphere of service, he gave up the major portion of his law practice, and since that time he has devoted his energies to the furthering of the interests of the University, its officials, its faculty, and its students.

Although not a Virginian by birth, Mr. Penick has spent most of his life in Lexington and its vicinity. He was born at Flint Hill, his father's home, near Concord, N. C., in October, 1867. Six years later, the family removed to Rockbridge County, Virginia, when his father, Dr. D. A. Penick became pastor of New Monmouth Presbyterian Church. Dr. Penick remained at New Monmouth for some forty-one years, at the end of which time he was made pastor emeritus.

The future Treasurer until he was twelve years of age attended Highland Belle School, located near his home. Following this he spent one year at the then well-known school taught by the Rev. Mr. Harris in Floyd County, Virginia. Yet with these limited opportunities, Mr. Penick was enabled to accomplish a feat which has been equalled by but few in the history of Washington and Lee University. Before he had reached his fourteenth birthday he was a regularly matriculated student in this institution.

After his graduation Mr. Penick was for some years principal of a large co-educational school at Round Rock, Texas. Subsequently he engaged in clerical work at El Paso, but in 1890 the call of Virginia became too strong for him and he located in Richmond, where he was identified with prominent business interests. It was during his residence in Richmond that he was married to Miss Frances Edmondson Monroe on January 3, 1895.

Soon after his marriage, the Bank of Rockbridge, then the only bank in Lexington, was almost reduced to bankruptcy when its cashier absconded with a large sum of money. At the urgent call of Judge Edmondson, to whom had fallen the difficult task of putting the bank's affairs again on a firm basis, Mr. Penick returned to Lexington as his assistant. In addition to this work, he enrolled as a student in the Washington and Lee Law School. Continuing his brilliant record of previous years, he, in spite of his outside activities, graduated in one year's time, the honor student of his class and the winner of the one hundred dollar law prize for that year. He immediately began the practice of law in Lexington, where he has since resided, becoming Treasurer of the University some eight years ago.

For many years Mr. Penick has been a loyal and enterprising citizen of the community, always taking an active part in its affairs. He was largely instrumental in the enlarging of the nearby hydro-electric plant, and after putting it on a firm financial basis, sold it to its present owners, the Virginia-Western Power Company. He has been for some years past the President of the Rockbridge National Bank, a member of the Y. M. C. A. Advisory Board of the University, and since his retirement in 1913 from active membership on the Board of Trustees he has been its efficient secretary.

From his earliest boyhood Mr. Penick has been a faithful and loyal member of New Monmouth Presbyterian Church. He has long been one of its elders and its Sunday School owes much of its present prosperity to his careful and painstaking interest in it as its superintendent. In his personal life can be found an example of geniality, piety, humor, conscientious devotion to duty, uncompromising attitude toward all that is questionable, and loyalty to life's ideals, which is indeed enviable.

It is in recognition of his sterling worth as a man that the CALYX for 1921 is dedicated to him.

ADMINISTRATION

Washington and Lee University

A National Institution located in the shrine of Southern tradition.
A Center of Patriotism since Colonial times, yet independent of state or party politics.
A Loyally Christian Institution, yet independent of ecclesiastical control.

INSPIRATIONAL ASSETS

Washington and Lee's Inspirational Assets are a unique and unpurchasable inheritance. No institution in America can compare with it in the influence of its great names and ennobling associations.

George Washington selected it to use his wealth and bear his name.

The immortal Lee, having no money to give, gave himself to the institution. Through five years of magnetic and inspiring leadership, he rebuilt and developed his great kinsman's college, and set forever its ideals of tolerance, courtesy, honor, and patriotism; then, worn out with his incessant labors, he bequeathed to it his sacred dust and his incomparable name.

Young men whose characters take shape amid such influences must, from the very air they breathe, grow toward the stature of greatness and learn the nobility of service.

NATIONALISM

Washington and Lee's Nationalism, therefore, is no surprise. Altho located in the very focus of Southern history and tradition, its campus has become a meeting ground for North, South, East and West, where a universal campus friendliness knows no difference between Democrats and Republicans, Protestants and Catholics, Southerners and Northerners.

Of 626 students enrolled in 1919-20, 421 or more than two-thirds, were from outside of Virginia.

Three-fourths of the University's endowment and equipment are of National rather than Southern origin; while the extraordinary prominence of its alumni in national affairs bears witness to the national spirit engendered within its halls.

PATRIOTISM AND RELIGION

Throughout its long history Washington and Lee's campus has been a center of ardent Patriotism and Evangelical Religion.

In 1776, two months before the immortal Declaration of July 4th, its Trustees changed its name from Augusta Academy to Liberty Hall.

Its sons exemplified the spirit of their Alma Mater on the battlefields of the Revolution. Again in 1861 they left the campus in a body as the Liberty Hall Volunteers, and shed their blood on a score of battlefields during the dark days of the Civil War. Lately, amid the horrors of France and Flanders, its thousand representatives in military service and its famous Ambulance Corps have proved worthy of the best traditions of Washington and Lee.

A steady stream of ministers and missionaries has borne testimony to the religious atmosphere of the institution, and one of its most zealous alumni associations is maintained in China.

INDEPENDENCE AND PROGRESSIVENESS

In Independence and Progressiveness Washington and Lee is unique among Southern institutions.

It stands almost alone in its entire independence of both church and state. Deeply and evangelically Christian in its founders and presidents, its local environment, and its spirit and traditions, it is governed by a self-perpetuating Board and is under no denominational control. Although located in the heart of Virginia and itself a shrine of Southern tradition, it is entirely independent of Virginia politics or legislative control.

Washington and Lee was the first institution in America to recognize Journalism as a profession and establish regular courses in this department. The first endowed School of Commerce in the South was established at Washington and Lee with its own faculty, building, library, and reading room. It is also one of the very few Southern institutions which for many years has allowed a student to substitute modern languages and take an A.B. degree without either Greek or Latin. In the freedom of its elective system, its universal compulsory physical training, and its fifteen-unit requirement for entrance, it also follows national rather than Southern customs and standards.

Progressiveness of Washington and Lee

Altho deeply and Evangelically religious in its founders, traditions, teaching force, and environment, the University is governed by a self-perpetuating Board, and is entirely independent of Virginia politics and legislative control, being, therefore, almost the only institution of higher education in the whole South not subject to non-educational control and interference.

This freedom may help explain its unusual progressiveness. Since the general shake-up of the Great War the papers are all telling how Princeton, Yale, Vanderbilt, the University of Virginia, and other institutions are beginning to break away from the medieval tyranny of the classics and are daring to give the A.B. degree without Greek, and some of them without even Latin. That modern languages may take the place of both Latin and Greek has been the routine practice at Washington and Lee since 1891.

From any monograph on the subject one can learn that the first college courses in Journalism ever taught in America were formally established by the W. and L. Board of Trustees in 1869 during the presidency of General Lee.

Likewise the first regularly organized School of Commerce in the South, with its own faculty, building, endowment, and library, was founded at Washington and Lee in 1905 and has been in successful operation ever since.

In abandoning the old "Southern" 14-unit entrance requirement, with its conditioned entrance-gate for 3-year high-school students, Washington and Lee also led all the institutions of its section.

Amid the absurd and ever-shifting red tape of "required" and "elective" high-school courses, by which the eastern classical colleges are still striving to dominate the curriculum of the expanding American Public High School, the Washington and Lee faculty have again blazed the way by adopting the following: "Full 16-unit graduates of standard four-year high schools, so rated by their own State Departments of Education, will not be denied admittance to Washington and Lee because of the nature and contents of their four-year curriculum." It is confidently predicted that within ten years every university in the South will have broken its old-time fetters and taken its place on this simple 20th century platform.

Joseph R. Long

The Law School

THE success attained in professional and public life by alumni of the Law School affords the best assurance as to the character of its work, of its ideals, and of its student body. The fact that a small law school should have furnished to the country so many prominent men has often been commented upon. About a year ago the writer noted in a single issue of a prominent journal the names of three Washington and Lee men seriously mentioned as possible candidates for the Presidency, two of them alumni of the Law School. One of these was the favorite candidate of a great national daily, and the point most stressed by that journal was his profound knowledge of the law.

The success of the School has been due to a combination of causes. One is the fact that the school is of moderate size. The number of students is sufficiently large to afford inspiration and fellowship, but not large enough to submerge the individual. The composition and character of the student body is another factor. To a degree probably not equalled by any other school of its size, it is a national school. The students come from many states, and each student is thus brought into contact with men from different parts of the country, and provincialism is escaped. One meets at Washington and Lee, men from far and near whom he is glad to know in after life. Further, with few distractions, the conditions are favorable for study. This is a place for work. Last may be mentioned the spirit of freedom and true democracy that pervades this campus. There are few regulations and no red tape. Rigid formality is unknown. Each professor is left free to teach in his own way, selecting his own books and methods. The members of the faculty are always ready to meet the students as advisors and friends, and the relations of the students with each other are friendly and intimate. It is its methods and spirit, rather than its material equipment, that constitute the strength of the Law School of Washington and Lee.

School of Commerce and Administration

WASHINGTON and Lee was the first southern university to establish a regularly organized School of Commerce. This is in harmony with the progressive policy of the University, which attempts to fit students to meet the problems of modern life. The School of Commerce and Administration was authorized by the Trustees in 1905, and was organized in 1906. It was established on, and is in part supported by, a foundation raised as a memorial to William L. Wilson.

A large proportion of college graduates now enter business as a career; many others enter public or social service in administrative work. Yet until recently the American college, following traditional classical standards, gave only a general cultural education, and offered little service to the business man. The young man destined for business secured his training in the business office. Yet today business, in its magnitude and complexity, demands a breadth of vision and a grasp of principles which cannot be acquired solely through office or departmental routine. The modern school of commerce gives a broad training in economic principles and a knowledge of commercial methods and industrial organization and management that will fit men to rise to positions of industrial leadership.

The School of Commerce and Administration of Washington and Lee University is organized as one of the regular schools of the University. It has a well-trained faculty, a well-equipped building, its own library of several thousand volumes, and receives the most important periodicals and public documents in the fields of economics, commerce and government.

The degree of Bachelor of Science in Commerce is offered for the completion of a regular four-year course of study. This course combines a general college education with a considerable degree of specialization in business and administrative subjects. The first and second years include the general college courses in English, mathematics, science, history and foreign language, together with the introductory courses in economics, government, and accounting. In the junior and senior years the courses are specialized in the field of work which the student expects to enter after graduation. Those who expect to be business managers or executives may concentrate their work on business administration, corporation finance, banking, labor, and allied subjects. Those who wish to be public accountants may concentrate on accounting, finance, law, and allied subjects. Those who intend to engage in social work, or public administrative service, or foreign trade may concentrate their work in preparation for any of these fields of service. Thus the courses may be selected according to the needs of the students, in business administration or accounting or public or social service.

The School of Applied Science

WHEN, after the Civil War, General Robert E. Lee became president of Washington College, he had as one of his expressed aims the fitting of the young men of the South to develop the resources of their own land. With the meager means and facilities of the college at that time, only a beginning could be made during his lifetime, but that beginning was made by the election of Colonel William Allan to the chair of Applied Mathematics. Later, General G. W. Custis Lee, who had succeeded his father as president of what had become Washington and Lee University, also filled this professorship.

For some years the degree of C.E. was given to the graduates in Engineering, but later the degree of B.S. with special attainments in Civil Engineering was adopted, in accordance with the practice of the best schools of engineering. B.S. with special attainments in Chemistry was afterward added.

General Custis Lee was succeeded by Professor David C. Humphreys, and the graduates of the school of Applied Science will always look back with pleasure on the memory of "Old Davy", as he was affectionately called, and feel that such success as they have attained in life was due to the painstaking start he gave them.

The ideals laid down by General Robert E. Lee for the School of Applied Science hold even more today, when the development of the natural resources of the South is proceeding with most rapid strides. This is the aim of the School today—to fit the young men of the country for the development of her resources.

Rather than try to train in many lines, for which adequate equipment in men and laboratories was lacking, it has always been the policy of the School to do a few things, for which it was equipped, well. The men who have gone out with its stamp have shown themselves the peers of any in their field.

The effort is now being made to raise the means to broaden the scope of the School, and thus attain more fully the aims of its first president. With the backing of the Confederate Veterans, the United Daughters of the Confederacy, and other organizations, who have already named Washington and Lee as the most typical Southern institution, the Robert E. Lee School of Engineering, well equipped and endowed, is a dream near to being fulfilled. Surely there could be no more fitting memorial of the great man and leader than the carrying out of the plans he himself laid down for the training of the young men of his land.

Hon. Harry St. George Tucker

MR. Tucker entered Washington and Lee in 1871, receiving his M. A. in 1875, at that time the highest academic degree awarded, and B.L. in 1876. He afterwards practiced law in Stanton until 1888 when he was elected to the fifty-first congress as the democratic representative from the tenth district. He remained eight consecutive years in Congress where he became distinguished as a forceful speaker and an unswerving adherent to principle. The true principles of democracy have always been foremost in his mind. In the fifty-third congress he was author of the bill that repealed the notorious "Force Bill", sent as a scourge upon the democrats of the South; he was also author of the "Tucker Bill" which proposed a constitutional amendment to elect United States Senators by a direct vote of the people. This amendment passed the House of Representatives twice but did not become a part of the Constitution until a few years ago.

Mr. Tucker was called to the Chair of Law at Washington and Lee in 1897 where he remained until 1903. He became Dean of the Law School and after the death of Hon. William L. Wilson was for a while acting president of the university.

He is author of a number of books involving constitutional law questions and has a national reputation as one of the ablest authorities on constitutional law. He was chosen President of the American Bar Association, a distinction enjoyed only by the most eminent members of the American Bar.

Mr. Tucker is heartily supported by Washington and Lee students in his governatorial campaign.

Φ Γ Δ; Δ Σ P; S. & C; Debating Team

Enter John Gilbert of the Twin City, Bristol, Va.-Tenn. He is a fair specimen of the "Great Southwest." His academic work was done at Emory and Henry College. His fame as candidate for the House of Delegates had preceded him here. After the election of 1919, obeying the call of conscience since "time immemorial," John decided to study law—naturally, at Tucker Hall. He represented the University in debate with Johns Hopkins, was elected member of the Debating Council, Delta Sigma Rho and other forensic societies. He attended Michigan University Summer School and incidentally the notification ceremonies on the "Front Porch." Returning to the "Bloody Mirth," he was elected Temporary Chairman of the Republican Convention. In his keynote speech he assured the delegates such enthusiasm for their hero, "C. Bascom," the great congressman was forced to surrender to the stampede in his behalf. John was one of the "spell-binders" at the Lyric joint political discussion. Politics is John's religion, Will Hayes his prophet, and beside him there is no other except "Bascom." If character, sincerity and loyalty count in the race, we will hear from him higher up.

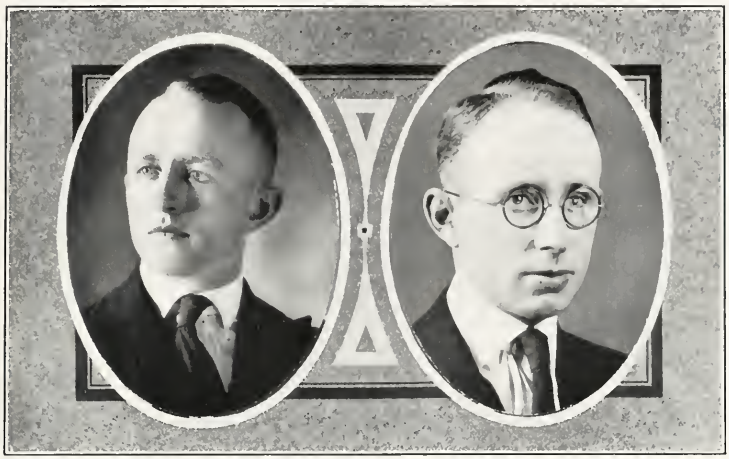
John Franklin Bain
Capron, Virginia

Φ Δ Δ

Two years ago, the stones of Tucker Hall began a mighty trembling at the approach of the master-mind of our hero, J. F. Bain. Blades of grass turned brown before the warmth of his intellect, and within two months of his arrival, even the leaves had fallen in reverence from the trees.

But don't think too highly of him; he is a hardened lady-killer. Many are the girls who are either weeping in anguish or dancing with some other fellow because he coldly spurned their advances.

He will receive his degree in June and we wish him overwhelming success in his chosen profession, only we don't know what it is. Outside of being president or an ouija board prophet (he hasn't decided which), his only ambition is for beards to become à la mode, so that he can eliminate the necessity of his morning shave.



Sherman Hart Ballard
Peterstown, West Virginia

Σ N; Φ Δ Φ; S. & C.

After prepping at Woodstock, Virginia, and spending three years at the University of West Virginia, and after making history with the famous Marne Division throughout the war as a 1st Lieutenant, Sherman cast his lot with the study of law and, of course, came to Washington and Lee. Since then, his time has been absorbed chiefly with wrestling with the old problem how to get a degree in two years and retain the mind and self respect. He has at last successfully solved this problem, making an enviable scholastic record, but at the same time he has been a familiar sight on the campus, at McCrum's, and at Buena Vista.

Sherman has been an all-around college man, an exponent of Terpsichore, a leader among his closer friends, a coming Willie Hoppe, and showing at the same time no mean ability at solving legal problems. He has been in all college activities, and although he has been too busy in the Law House to demonstrate his athletic prowess, the college will lose a valuable man when he returns to his native State to interpret the law to his fellow citizens, after he graduates from an active practice.

Herbert Barnes

Σ Φ E; S. & C.

And they call him "Esau." Living up to his name, Barnes is all wool and a yard wide. The friendship of the writer with the subject of this sketch, formed at Randolph-Macon, has deepened and broadened during our sojourn in Lexington the past two years. Possessing the happy faculty of making friends, Barnes has endeared himself to all who know him, and most everyone at W. & L. knows him. He is witty, sympathetic, brilliant, a true, indefatigable, and conscientious worker. Possessed of these rich qualities, a genuine success in his chosen profession awaits him—success in his personal undertakings and a contented heart filled with that supreme reward derived from service to one's fellowmen.

Judging from his punctuality at the post office, displayed at the coming of every mail, Barnes' "Domestic Relations" should be a continual chain of bliss. Law is a jealous mistress, but it doesn't seem to be the only one.

Here is a student, athlete, and politician. In September, 1919, Hunter hied him hither from the fields of Dinwiddie to gratify his insatiable desire for knowledge. And from the beginning, his opinions on legal matters were sought after by his classmates. Though fond of the law he was not so enveloped in it that he could find no time for other activities, for he fought on the gridiron with the same zealous spirit exhibited in the classroom. Incidentally, he holds the University record in weight. His achievements are too multifarious to recount; for one thing, he is the "Boise Penrose" of the campus, and no enterprise could succeed without his approval. His magnetic personality draws the best wishes of everyone on the campus, from the insignificant freshman to the dignified professor.

Hunter, you are a man of integrity and perseverance, a friend loyal and true.

A product of the Old Volunteer State, Bell came to us in 1919. Since then he has been wasting his time in the perusal of such trash as is commonly known as Long's Domestic Relations, Blackwood and a few of the others that we don't know the names of just now. Doing an ordinary three-year course in two years, Bell shows a kind of ability not exactly identical with that of shooting crap and playing pool. But far be it from us to give you the idea that he is a grind. He is absolutely not and he lacks all those disagreeable qualities that we generally associate with a grind. A true friend, a good student, a loyal supporter of the White and Blue, there is nothing that could give us more pleasure than in wishing him all the wonderful success that is due a man of his ability.

There is nothing of more importance to the world than the coming in or the going out of a great man's life. It is therefore with a deep sense of honor and reverence for the subject of this sketch that we look back upon that day not so very long ago when "Jimmy" Blanks made his appearance upon this terrestrial ball.

As time glided by, the flower of youth blossomed into manhood, and the Stalwart Son of the Old Dominion State was spending his time in prep school and awaiting with much expectation and anticipation the time that he could take upon himself the responsibility of studying law at Washington and Lee.

He entered Tucker Hall in September, 1919; in June he will experience a full realization of his boyhood vision by holding his LL.B. degree.

"Dunc's" dad wears a Phi Beta Kappa key, and when "Dunc" left his "dear old" prep school he was determined to dangle a like piece of jewelry on his chest. But Sewanee was not the place to go so deeply into study, and in his two years there our hero made records along other lines of endeavor. In the midst of the fun, the war came on and "Dunc" did his part with the others. In 1919, Duncan realized that he was "getting along" and decided to study law.

One Sunday afternoon just two years ago, this dancing demon opened the back door of the Washington and Lee Law Building and introduced himself to Mr. Josephus Long who was then engaged in an exciting poker game with Mr. Moreland. From that day our young Lochinvar has been all that a student of the law should be. His average grade is around ninety.

In ten years, Duncan Burch will be one of the best lawyers in Memphis.

"Curly" blew into Washington and Lee from the Naval Academy. On his arrival he gave promise of great things. He was at once elected President of the Junior Law Class. However, it was not long before "Curly's" real nature asserted itself.

Now by his friends he is considered a "rare bird of the unknown species," a paradox. His chief characteristic is temperament. He is romantic, poetic, capricious, fastidious, precise and practical. He believes in good, clean profanity; and each morning after attending servile classes, never regrets to hasten down to McCrum's to spend the day's end.

His handsome features placed him on the Varsity Nine, and now the town takes judicial notice of his ability on the second sack. After all, "Curly" is a real likable chap and his most intimate friends say he takes himself seriously. He is at times a profound legal thinker, and his flashes of wit mark him as a promising man in his chosen profession.

"Res ipsa loquitur"

Burt, or "The War Horse of Debate" (as he is familiarly called by Dr. Smith), came to W. & L. in the fall of 1914. Since that time his steadiness of purpose and unfailing attention to duty and his inherent worth have combined to make of his college career a complete success. In four years he achieved both the degrees of Bachelor of Arts and Master of Arts. Then he discarded the academic gown for the navy pea-coat.

The armistice signed he came back to the campus, but this time as a member of the faculty, he being made an Instructor of Political Science. Not being content with the signal honors he had won, he entered new fields, to wit, the Law School. A student again, the students conferred on him the honor which he so richly deserved—President of the Student Body. The University will confer upon him this year the degree of Bachelor of Laws, being the only remaining honor she has to give him.

Philo Coco
Marksville, Louisiana

Σ Δ K

Judging from his name, one would think that this young solon came from Atlanta, Georgia, the home of Coca Cola. In fact he is half of a Coca Cola, but his friends say that he has never been drunk. It is safe to say that if Philo ever gets married, it will be a EUNA-lateral contract. As a debater, Philo stands in the front rank of the "spell-binders" of the Graham-Washington Literary Society. The historic walls of that old building have often resounded with the eloquence of his appeals.

This eloquence and his knowledge of the law, coupled with his magnetic personality, will hypnotize the jury, so that they can see no other side of the question but his. It will take no wild flight of fancy to picture this young orator pleading the cause of some unfortunate Creole before the Lonisiana Bar, with an eloquence that would do credit to Cicero or Demosthenes.

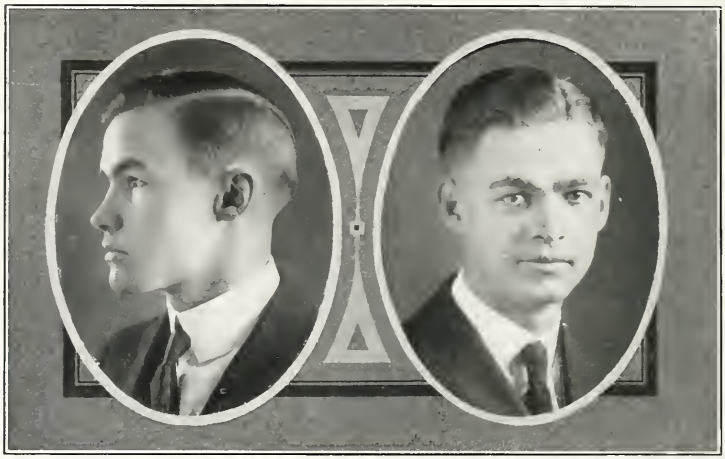
Marcus Aurelius Cogbill
Chesterfield Courthouse, Virginia

K A, Football Monogram '19 and '20; Member Atbletic Council '20-'21

Little did the historieal Chesterfield Court House realize that on February 2, 1896, one came into their midst who was again to give Chesterfield a place parallel only to the Colonial days. "Mac" Cogbill chose a different method of accomplishing this, however, and his adaptability to the "pigskin" has enabled him to make a history that will long be remembered by his college mates.

Let us not drift too fast, though, but divert to a little history of this lad. At eighteen he began his college career at Randolph-Macon College, where in his third year, it was interrupted by the call to arms. His ability is not confined to football, however, as one year after his enlistment he was commissioned to be a 1st Lieutenant. Discharged from the army, he decided to study law at W. & L., and here he reached his greatest success. To quote from Coach Raftery, "he was the brains of the General's eleven," and no quarterback has served with more distinction on any General's team than he.

"Mac," quiet in nature, a friend to all, and a diligent worker, expects to pursue his legal career, and very promising is the success the future holds for him.



William Henry Connelly
Alberta, Virginia

Σ Φ E; Σ T; Φ Δ Φ

Henry said, "For the love of pie-crust, don't mention any women in my sketch. The last time I was written up, my history contained a lot of junk about some janes, and as a result my real girl embarrassed me by demanding an explanation. Let your conscience be your guide." We promised faithfully that we wouldn't say a word about his frequent visits to the dentist's or his excursions on South Main Street or his letters from Roanoke and all points East and West. And we won't go back on our promise; it wouldn't be fair to Henry. Furthermore, it might reveal in him certain traits and characteristics hitherto unknown by any except his most intimate acquaintances, which will never do.

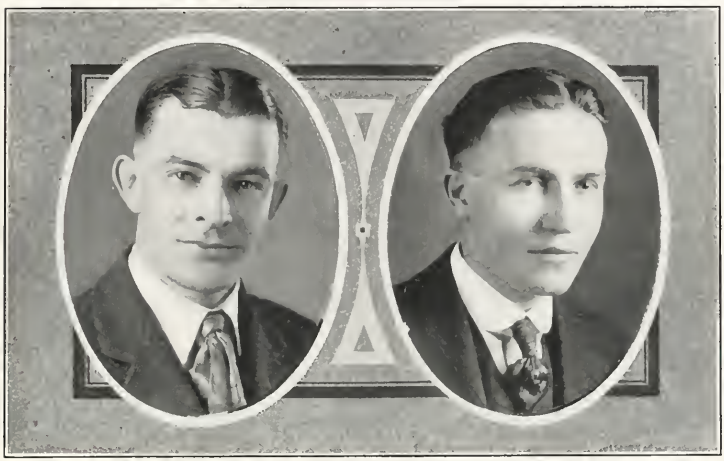
After trying out V. P. I., William and Mary, and Randolph-Macon, at which latter institution he secured his A.B. degree, Henry decided to complete his legal education at W. & L. He is one of the sharks of the class, a deep thinker with a calculating brain that weighs every problem before reaching an ultimate conclusion. His conclusions, it might be added, are nearly always correct.

Paul Conoway Crumpler
Magnolia, Arkansas

K Σ; Φ Δ Φ

Paul comes to us from the City of Magnolia, as we are modestly told, "the flower of that grand old State of Arkansas." After his preliminary preparation at Magnolia High School, which by the way possesses a yell fully as artistic as its name, Paul started in search of legal knowledge. He came to W. & L. to take his law degree and with his aim ever before him, he has spent a large part of his time cloistered in the law building.

As we have heard rather frequently, "still waters run deep," and so with Paul. Although not given to superfluous conversation, those who know him, find in him a staunch friend, a hard worker, and a character and personality which give strong promise of success in his chosen field. We are told that having finished his course he will return to his native State to hang out his shingle.



D. Boone Dawson
Charleston, West Virginia

Vice-President Literary Society; Member of Debating Council; Φ Δ Δ

To try to enumerate the good qualities of this rising young jurist, would be only to elaborate on his proved abilities.

Boone, with the lingering smile of his grand old State still fresh on his face, came to W. & L. to give his capabilities the "acid test." His ready answers to "Boss" Moreland's staggering problems have baffled many of his unwary classmates. As an orator he has won even the admiration of those who oppose him in debates. When he once decides to uphold his convictions, his fluent and persuasive eloquence commands attention, and none dare contest his arguments unless they are prepared for the worst.

As legal timber, Boone will be as sturdy as an oak, and we predict an eventful and fruitful practice for him. His magnetic influence in the participation of the last Presidential campaign resulted in accomplishing remarkable achievements.

Judging from his occasional intimations, one cannot help but prosphesy that his first case will be an appeal to a minister—no, not for the ceremony only, for the "better half" too. Anyway we bet that Boone wins his case.

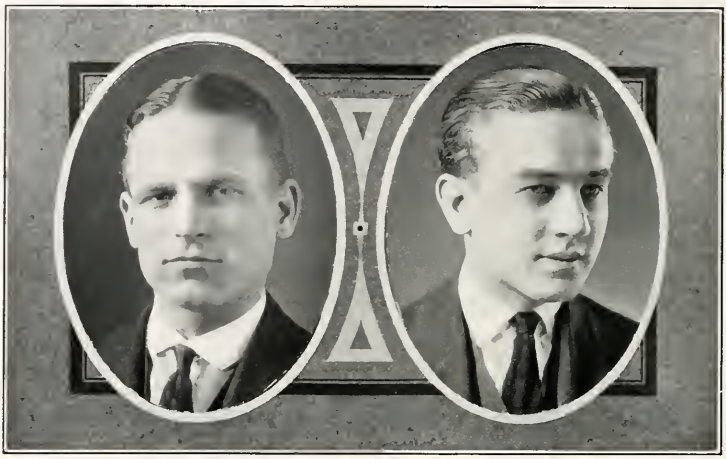
Fred Turpin Deaver
Lexington, Virginia

Φ Δ Δ; Graham-Washington Literary Society

"Daddy" Deaver began his course at Washington and Lee back in the ages after having completed a preliminary course at the Lexington High School. But after a year of hard work he decided to take a rest before going on his second lap toward his degree. In the meantime he contracted a most natural partnership, but on further consideration, he was forced to conclude that a deeper study of "Domestic Relations" would be necessary if he were to uphold his side in the family court.

Thus it was that we had him back with us in the Law School in September, 1919. After another year of diligent study, he was able to pass the State Bar and has now received his license and is a full-fledged lawyer.

After getting his degree in June we predict for Fred a wonderful success in his chosen profession.



William Braxton Dew
Wytheville, Virginia

Φ Γ Δ; K B Φ; Φ Δ Φ; W. F.; C. C.

Notwithstanding the air of judicial dignity which at times overspreads the countenance of this budding attorney, he ranks as one of the youthful members of the Class of '21, having begun his mundane existence in the City of Lynchburg some twenty-two years ago. He received his preparatory education at McGuire's School in Richmond, and entered the Academic School of Washington and Lee in the fall of 1915. He soon became one of the best known and most popular freshmen on the campus, but failing to find sufficient intellectual stimulus in academic work he withdrew from college for a year, and on his return entered the portals of Tucker Hall where he immediately proceeded to make good.

But those times were too stirring for one of Braxton's character to remain quietly at college. He enlisted in the Tank Corps, and after seeing considerable service in this country and in France he received his discharge in time to re-enter the Law School in the fall of 1919. Since then he has stood consistently near the head of every class.

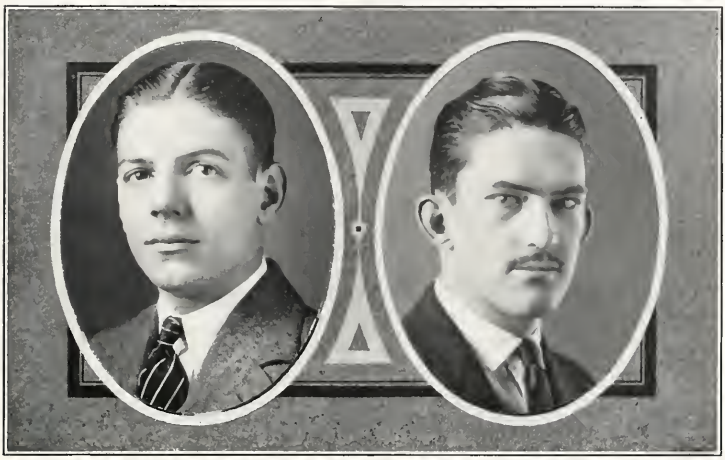
He wanted the Law and he's got it.
A degree in June he will take
Back to the hills where he started
His fame and his fortune to make.

On the roster of the S. A. T. C. at W. & L. was found the name of this lad from the hills of West Virginia who was destined to become the greatest soldier of the modern world. But Fate intervened and the armistice was signed. But even Fate could not conquer the indomitable spirit of this little fighter. He resolved that he would yet fight for the Cause of Humanity in their Battles of Peace before the Courts of Justice. So he answered the call of Tucker Hall, and has won his first fight and will take his LL.B. in June.

"Heavy" is noted for his sobriety in politics, his optimism during examinations, his "White Hot Concentration in Study," and his "successions" in love.

Best luck, "Joe," we expect you to put West Virginia on the map, to make Huntington's metropolis, and to find that "Gold Mine."



James William Dupree
Tampa, Florida

Φ Δ Θ; Φ Δ Φ; Ω Δ K; President Troubadours '20-'21; S. & C.

"Bill" hails from Tampa, Florida, and after wandering among many institutions of learning, settled at Washington and Lee. While here he has demonstrated his ability in the class room, where his work has been of an exceptionally high quality, and he has kept this high standard while completing the Law Course in two years. But "Bill" is not a grind—far from it! He has always found time to identify himself with campus activities of the best sort, and has given a great deal of his time and energy to help push the things that really count. This is especially true of the Troubadours, being president of that organization during the past year, while he was foremost in the little group that, almost alone, developed and fostered it.

Always ready to aid a good cause or a fellow student, he has made many friends, and we anticipate that it will always be a pleasure to meet "Bill" in the years to come.

Theodore King Fountain
Raleigh, North Carolina

K A; Π A N; Troubadours

We have been looking for the "King" to crown them with, but we have just now come across him. He is certainly here now though. If you don't believe it just take a look at his name. Why even his name's King.

In September, 1919, Fountain was a most enthusiastic young man when he entered the Washington and Lee Law School and bought a lot of books that he would never use. From that auspicious day, King has spent most of his time studying, bulling, eating and sleeping; bulling, eating, sleeping and studying; eating, sleeping, studying and bulling; sleeping, studying bulling and eating.

Fountain is bound to make good, for he knows law and knows where to find what he doesn't know. His ability to make friends that stick, will always be an asset.

Robert Lee Garrett
Shreveport, Louisiana

A T Ω; Π A N

At the beginning of the eventful fall of 1918 when school life and campus activity were restrained by the arm of Uncle Sam and his S. A. T. C., "Count" made his first appearance on the campus as a freshman. Having followed the fickle goddess of academic knowledge, he, after his fashion, turned to the more stable goddess of law. In this he has been able to give vent to his profundity of speech and ideas. One finds, however, by looking at his grades that he is generally right in the basic principles of his reasonings. By securing his degree in two years, he has proved that he is as fast in securing scholastic knowledge as he is on the dance floor.

Robert first made his appearance on this planet in May, 1901, in the City of Shreveport.

One might go so far as to compare him to a youthful prodigy, for he is the youngest member of his graduating class.

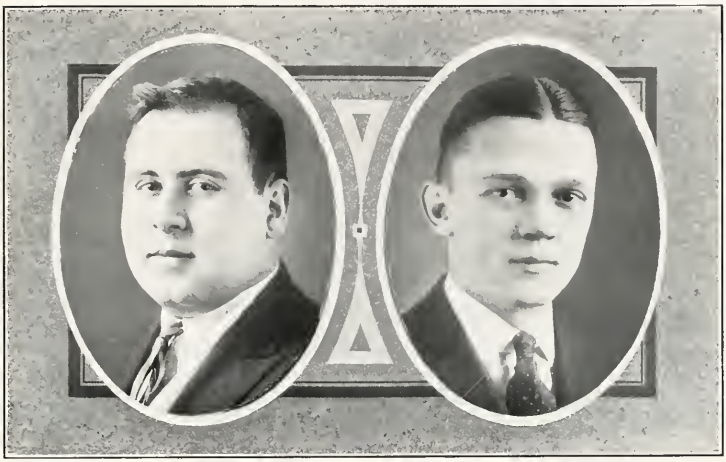
We will miss his smiling face when he goes to practice law in the south where the dark-skinned maidens bathe their feet in the tepid waters of the Gulf.

Howard Kemper Gibbons
Roanoke, Virginia

Φ K Σ; Φ Δ Φ; Σ; Π A N; Glee Club

"Gib" first made his appearance at W. & L. some seven or eight years ago as a star performer on the cinder path for Roanoke High School in the Interscholastic Meets. When he went back to The Magic City he carried with him, besides his medals, a conviction that W. & L. was the place for him. So after serving in France as Lieutenant in the Intelligence Service, he entered the Law School in January, 1919, and will be proclaimed a full-fledged Bachelor of Laws in June, 1921.

His presence in Tucker Hall each morning is a signal that classes are ready to start and he turns out the lights every night on leaving. The fact that he is a constant worshipper at the shrine of John Randolph Tucker does not mean that he is unknown to the ladies or to McCrum's and other places where good fellows get together. He was Historian of the Junior Class in 1919, and is an active member of the Glee Club, having taken an active interest in the organization of the Troubadours last year. He will practice law somewhere below the Mason and Dixon Line.



Carl Everett Leonard Gill
Washington, D. C.

Manager Calyx '21; Troubadours, Secretary Troubadours '19-'20; B Γ

We suppose that Carl got his experience at the center of our national political campaigns. That is the only way we can explain it. But regardless of experience, etc., Gill has demonstrated that he is one of the shrewdest and most calculating politicians on the campus. But unlike a good many so-called politicians, he has not yet met defeat. Last year he was elected manager of this year's Calyx. And let us say right here that Gill has been a real manager. His work has been of the highest quality and his management has been a complete success. So that this will dispel any idea you may have got that he is only a politician.

In the Troubadour organization and in its origination also, Carl has been prominent. And who doesn't remember that Troubadour show back in 1920 as the place where Little Blue Gill appeared. In other roles, Gill has likewise made a success. He is recognized as one of the bright lights of Tucker Hall and it is very doubtful if there is another man in college who has more friends than this loyal friend of friends. Whether he goes on the stage or decides to practice law, the best wishes of the entire student body go with him in his venture.

Walter Moss Gray
Farmville, Virginia

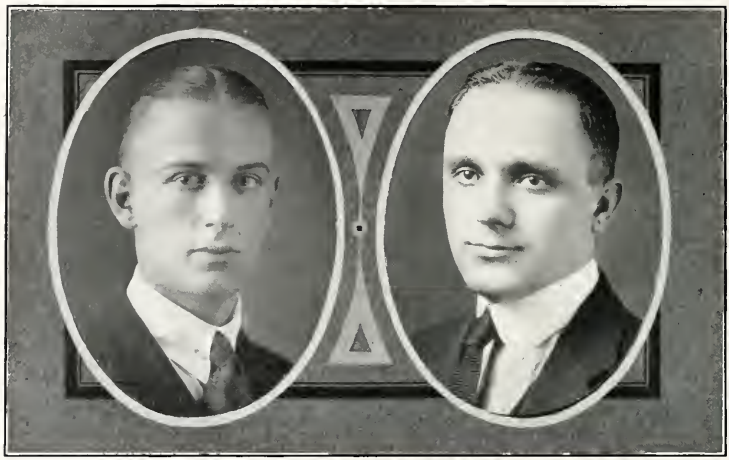
The fair (?) town of Farmville has been honored on many occasions, but listen! On the 28th day of January, 1896, there came to that city a personage who has gained distinction and has honored the above-mentioned town since that day.

Gray, as he is known on the campus, began his educational career in the Farmville High School, graduating from there with honors in the spring of 1915. Answering the "call to arms" from Uncle Sam, he enlisted and was sent, in the fall of 1916, to patrol the Mexican border, returning from there in the spring of 1917 only to re-enlist and be sent to France with the aviation corps, there serving his country for thirteen months.

Gray decided to become one of us and matriculated in the School of Law in the fall of 1919, where he has distinguished himself as a good all-round man, and also as a student, getting his LL.B. in two years.



Roy Jefferson Grimley

Graham-Washington Literary Society

"Eezewald," our champion "bull-slinger" and hobo, got to town in time for the S. A. T. C. and the other vicissitudes of fortune into which the old University found its way about three years ago. Having previously determined that a student's life should be one of ease, in order to express his determination in action, there was nothing left for him to do except look up Dean Long and become registered as a protégé of Tucker Hall. Since then "Eeze" has worked hard, and unless Atropos decides to cut the cord at the last moment he will run away with the old Law degree in June.

During his stay on the campus, Grimley has made numerous friends, and when he departs, it is unnecessary to say that he will leave a big place to be filled by someone. Do you hear the names of any candidates?

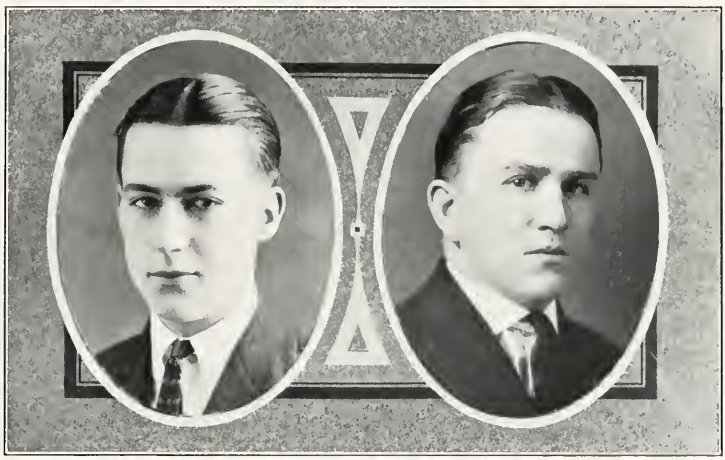
On September 16, 1919, Guy, fresh from the wilds of West Virginia, drifted into Lexington to see how much he could embarrass the law faculty by asking questions they could not answer. Although Guy has studied hard during the course, he has never let his studies interfere with his duties to the fairer sex, and, although examinations came three times a year, his trips to Covington could not be hindered.

We wish you, Guy, as much success in law as you have enjoyed with the ladies, and with such success we are sure you will not stop with anything short of the Supreme Court Bench.



Harry Forrest Henson, Jr., B.A.

A X P; Σ T; Φ A Δ; Instructor in English; Assistant Manager Calyx; Member Debating Council

After enjoying college life for four years at North Carolina and incidentally persuading the powers there to confer a B.A. degree upon him, "Little Harry" came to Washington and Lee to explore his chosen field. And it soon became evident to the frequenters of Tucker Hall that he had chosen wisely, for he is nothing short of a wizard when it comes to raveling the intricacies of the law. He is already a practicing attorney, having passed the Virginia Bar after having been at Washington and Lee only nine months. And the professors are wondering still how one small head carries all he knows. But the law by no means occupies all his time. Whenever Terpsichore visits W. & L., Harry does her homage. And the call of Crewe or Petersburg or Richmond lures him away from the beaten path with alarming frequency.

Congeniality, friendship, and optimism are his pleasing qualities.

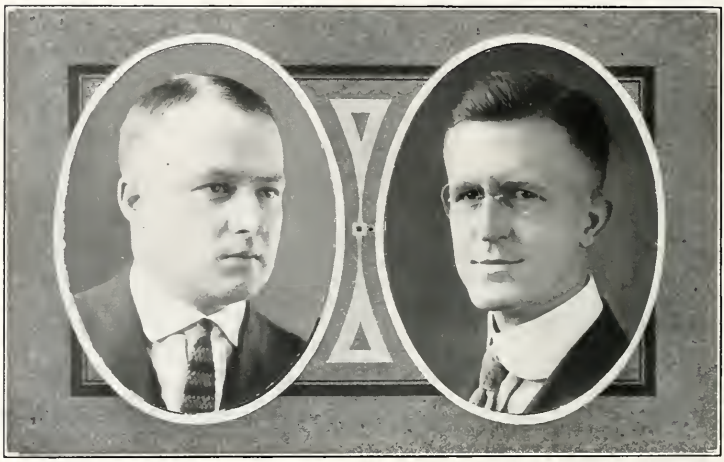
Owen, better known as "Pete," made his debut at W. & L. by entering the Academic School in 1916, after taking his preparatory work at Greenbrier. But his college career was cut short by the Great War, Pete answering the call for volunteers for the famous W. & L. Ambulance Unit. He was exactly Uncle Sam's man except in respect to altitude, here lacking a few inches. However, "Pete's" patriotism was as sincere as was his desire to reach fair Paris, and he made up for his height by pluck and determination in taking recourse to the Doremus Gymnasium, where by hanging by his toes while some of his enthusiastic classmates hung on his neck, he was stretched to the required dimension and passed the examination 100%. "Pete" showed his fitness by seventeen months' service overseas, on five fronts, and won the French Croix de Guerre.

His activities have not been confined to Tucker Hall, however, and he has been an efficient member of the Athletic Council and a bulwark of strength to the baseball team, while acquiring prominence on the campus as well.



Benjamin Franklin Howard

Σ Δ K; Graham-Washington Literary Society; Executive Committeeman '20

And still they come from that old mountain State of West Virginia, but so long as they are men such as Howard we don't feel that any objection should be made. Coming to Washington and Lee less than two years ago, Howard has made good—in capital letters. In the classroom his work has been of the very highest quality, and when he leaves, the professors will miss one whom they could always call upon when a real question of law was to be decided. On the campus also he has taken a prominent place in all student activities. In the Literary Society in particular he has done far more than his share and has aided very considerably in the maintaining of a good society while he has been on the campus.

During his short stay, Howard has also made numerous friends. On every occasion he has shown himself a loyal and true supporter of the White and Blue. From all present indications, Howard will make a great lawyer and those of us who watch the annals of West Va. will doubtless see great things done there by this young barrister.

Barefoot boys together, from the primary grades through the academic school at college and the enchanting and alluring Tucker Hall at W. & L., the writer knows whereof he writes concerning Jackson. It takes more than a mere acquaintance to know him. Deep beneath his genial smile and affable manner are hidden those qualities of manhood that are admired by everyone. Character is the keystone of his many virtues. Possessing a keen intellect, coupled with that ripeness acquired by years of deep study, Jackson has the best cultural education of anyone in the class. That is an excellent foundation upon which to build that future career of success and service which we predict for him.

Who mentioned the ladies? And when "Jack" falls, oh, boy!—he comes to attention on both knees,—pleading. He is writing a book entitled "Dan Cupid on the Banks of the Dan."

From the little mountain town of Clifton Forge there came to the "Mutreplis" of Lexington the smiling face and handsome countenance of Robert Blakeley James. It was in the fall of 1916 that he entered our halls of learning and signed up as a candidate for a B.A. degree. But other things interfered, including the S. A. T. C., and he stayed out of school for a year.

But the sun rose one bright September day in 1919 and found him back on the campus, but with his place of abode transferred to Tucker Hall. Since that time he has been studiously pursuing the elusive Law degree. But at last he has got it firmly clinched and will make away with it next June when no one is looking. The best wishes of his many friends go with him on his journey.

Carleton Ellsworth Jewett
Richmond, Virginia

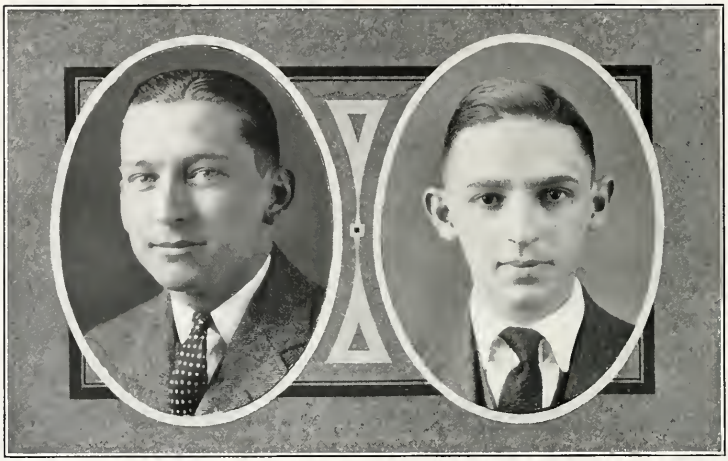
Graham-Lee Society; S. & C.

Ladies and Gentlemen, allow us to present our friend from the grand and hospitable capital of the Old Dominion. While in our midst Jewett has lived up to all the traditions of old Virginia hospitality and congeniality.

When he first came to W. & L. he possessed only one name, but like all truly great men, he acquired another cognomen, "Dobie," and now "Dobie" and Jewett are synonyms.

It is said that most lawyers are prone to put off their work, but prospective clients. Here is a man who performs his duties faithfully and untiringly. "Dobie's" old pipe seems to generate energy, and whenever he "fires her up" there is always steam enough behind it to propel him through whatever journey he sees fit to begin.

We predict success for Jewett and feel confident that he will reflect credit on his Alma Mater.



Willard Clinton Kidd

"Mike" sauntered into the University one day from that ancient metropolis of Petersburg. He meant business and that year saw him a scholar in Tucker Hall. However, he soon reformed and gave himself up entirely to the sterner realities of life, such as calicing, going to Sweet Briar, and spinning yarns for all who would listen.

"Mike" spent most of his time during the war with the A. E. F. His best friends have heard a good deal about the many excellent traits of the French people from him and he is particularly fond of expatiating upon the virtues of a certain little Madamoiselle, "somewhere in France."

He is a student, soldier, and gentleman and can always be depended upon to make one of a pleasant company. He is loved by all who have come within the range of his radiant vision.

Philip Kohen
Buchanan, Virginia

S. & C.

After Philip had shown his powers in the Buchanan High School, he began to cast about for new fields to conquer, and naturally hit upon Washington and Lee as the most desirable one. He entered with the famous Class of '21, and immediately took a high standing in his classes as a result of constant and careful application. Winning a place on the debating team sent by the Freshman Class to match wit and argument with a like team of Emory and Henry, Philip saw that his bent of mind was argumentative, and so migrated to Tucker Hall to complete his education.

Having applied himself to the study of law with all the zeal and painstaking care of a scholar and having voluminously devoured the legal lore of Blackstone, Mansfield, and other well-known luminaries, "Phil" passed the State Bar examination after only one year of study. His class and many friends on the campus are sure of his future success, and send him forth into his chosen profession with their best wishes.

This genial young man has been here for lo, these many years, and has browsed about in both the academic and law schools. But there is stern stuff in "Al's" make-up, as his persistence, loyalty, and courage testify, and when he leaves the old school with his well-deserved LL.B., he will carry with him the cordial best wisbes and the sincere friendship of faculty, undergraduates, and townspeople alike.

Guy hails from the "Old Volunteer State",—the sixteenth daughter of the Goddess of Liberty. He signs himself as from that section known sometimes as Memphis and says that he was born some time after the Civil War. Of course, that is just what he says and you will have to remember that we warn you to give only that amount of credence to his report that you think is becoming to a man of such high character and all-round good fellowship as is Guy.

After three years of hanging around the campus, Guy has decided to be done with it this year and will drag his old sheepskin back to the hills of Tennessee with him when he goes even if he has to pull all the wool off, leaving nothing but the hide. We don't know that a sheep's hide would be better than a sheepskin, anyhow. So here's luck to you, Guy, when you go back and begin your start.

Like many other law students, the writer included, "Lub" had his academic work at Emory and Henry. There he held an enviable reputation as an orator and debater, on every occasion doing honor to the name and fame of old Calliopean. However, when "Lub" (Jack) entered W. & L. he put all his popularity and laurels behind him, and so to speak, "pulled himself up by his own boot straps" to a place of respect and prominence among all of us whether we be student or teacher. His keen insight into human nature, his legal trend of mind, and his adaptability to every occasion seemed to be the most highly developed characteristic of his whole make-up. But to complete his obituary, we must not fail to note as one of his chief accomplishments his "knack" of making friends and admirers out of those by whom we would all love to be admired.

In fact, as an all-round man, "Lub" can't be beat, and his many friends expect great things of him in the future.

William Francis McCann
New Castle, Pennsylvania

In September, 1918, McCann ventured below the Mason and Dixon Line in search of that elusive thing called knowledge. His good judgment is illustrated by the fact that he chose W. & L. as the best place to attain his object, and since January, 1919, he has been one of the legal lights of Tucker Hall.

We are sure that his Alma Mater will, in future years, point to his name with pride, for he has in him a combination of those qualities that are generally considered as necessary to a successful leader.

As for our hero himself, an accurate description may be given in these few words: "He is a good fellow and a true friend."

Our best wishes go with him in his future career, the success of which we are already assured.

Coming to Washington and Lee straight from Ringgold (a small town somewhere in Virginia), this man's man leaves us as the most popular one on the campus. He has captained the football team, been President of the Athletic Association, and President of the Monogram Club. Besides holding these distinctions, he is also a member of most all the honorary clubs and societies at the University, and is well liked by all who know him.

To those who do not know we are letting you in on the big secret—Lindsay is an "International Lover,"—"can you beat it?" In Belgium, France, England, and even Germany, he has a stronghold, and interpreters are in demand when the boats come in.

During the war he left school temporarily with the Washington and Lee Ambulance Unit, later being commissioned 1st Lieutenant and sent overseas in the service of Uncle Sam.

Lindsay's re-election as Captain of the 1921 Generals comes as good news to everyone and we hope that it will bring him back to Lexington once more.

Vincenzo Messina
Brooklyn, New York

Vincenzo came to us in the fall of 1919, after having served a year in the medical corps of the A. E. F. After studying law for a while at Baune University, Vincenzo decided to complete his study of that noble profession at Washington and Lee. Consequently, September, 1919, found him an embryo Solon in Tucker Hall, a member of the immortal Class of '21.

Vincenzo has political aspirations, and if he is as successful in making friends in the Empire State as he has been on the campus, it will take no sage to predict that some day he will don the senatorial toga.

The Class of '21 is proud to have Vincenzo among its members. His sterling character has engraved his name upon our memory in letters that time can never erase. We predict a brilliant future for him in politics and at the New York Bar.

"Trock" Moore is one of those fellows that Washington and Lee wouldn't be the same without. He first came to Washington and Lee back in ——,well we have forgotten the exact year, but we remember that he got some kind of a degree in 1915. In the meantime let it be said to his praise or censure that he copped up about all the honors that were to be had.

But as one of the few whom the faculty and students just won't let go, "Trock" found his way back to the campus as an Intermediate lawyer in the fall of 1919. Since then he has resumed his former positions of leadership and has taken an active interest in all college activities. It was due in large measure to Stuart's leadership that the Troubadour organization was perfected and we owe much to him for its success during the past year. Being one of the more mature men of the student body, his counsel during the past two years has been exceedingly valuable and it is with a deep sense of sorrow and regret that we see him leave in June.

James Edward Moyler, Jr.

The writer having known Moyler all his life, he feels unable to do him justice in the brief space allotted to him for his history. A big man requires more than a few words of condemnation or praise, and Moyler is a big man. His stature is not measured by his accomplishments or lack thereof, but by what he is. That's the acid test of any man's greatness. To know him as he is, to appreciate his real worth, to understand his strength of character are things not acquired by a merely casual acquaintance. The more we study Moyler the more we admire him and the more we are impressed with his sterling qualities and his ability to draw friends to him. His success in the material things men strive for, must be commensurate with the size of his personality and the bigness of his heart. For what is success but the exaltation of one's soul by means of enthusiasm and zeal? We know Moyler will go ahead; he will find that there is plenty of room at the top.

Moyler relaxes by reading Mother Goose rhymes and juvenile stories. His favorite among the latter is "Alice in Wonderland." Ask Dad —he knows.

According to a contemporary, "Haynie" blew into Lexington in the fall of 1919 and "has been blowing ever since." To the latter part of which we all agree. He is as windy as the saxophone artist in our celebrated Shell-Shock Jazz Orchestra, dilating upon any and every subject that comes to mind. His words astound us—eleemosynary, ethnologically, periphery, chiaroscuro, ratiocination, and the like are among the simpler words of his vocabulary. To the average person they are "full of sound and fury, signifying nothing," and we fancy he himself doesn't understand a third of them. He has the notion, it seems, that for one to be a successful lawyer, one must keep the jury awake by shooting big words at their heads. If his theory is correct, "Haynie" is due to be a "howling success." (Which strikes us as being a rather clever pun.)

In spite of his line of gab, "Haynie" is a likable chap. For instance, he bribed us with a nice red winesap to give him a good write-up. But our conscience wouldn't permit it, as much as we like winesaps. This is the only chance we have had to get even with him. Our conscience, however, didn't prevent us from enjoying the apple.

"Hello, there, General, what's the news from the A. E. F.?"

That's "Ed's" countersign when he advances to meet us. For "Ed" was with the 80th Division in France and played a man's part towards ending the mêlée. He likes to talk about his army days, how he won the Red Cross at the battle of Cognac, his diverting experiences with frolicsome cooties, the wistful-eyed maiden in the battered village who said she would wait for him to come back to her, and so on. It might be observed, en passant, that the wistful-eyed maiden is still waiting wistfully for the return of her hero. This is no reflection upon "Ed's" ability as a raconteur. We let him say his speech through to the end, because it pays to be a good listener.

During his sojourn in our midst, "Ed" has attended to his business with a seriousness and earnestness that bespeak success in his chosen career. He has let nothing swerve him from the attainment of his goal, but has kept to the mark all the way through.

We want a friend like Bill Old. If we said nothing else we would have delivered an oration. In our entire career we have not met a more loyal and devoted comrade than is this sunny lad from Centralia. He sort of grows on a fellow. His companionship with Henry Connelly during the past two years has inspired us more than all the sermons ever preached could have done. Yes, Bill is the kind of friend we mean to hang on to—a purely selfish motive, to be sure, because we feel the need of more men like him.

Bill has a fondness for Farmville. We think this must be due to the fact that before he came to Lexington he stopped for a while at Hampden-Sidney. He has not forgotten that he is an ex-Tiger, too. But S. N. S. also has its attractions. Oh, Boy! you ought to see her—all tears and sighs and raving moonshine. Lucky Bill! We don't blame him for running down there Thanksgiving and Christmas and Washington's Birthday and all the other holidays. No, sir! He'd be crazy if he didn't.

Fred Clifton Parks
Chilhowie, Virginia

Σ Δ K; President Literary Society; Secretary-Treasurer Senior Law

Hailing from the mountains of the mighty southwest, this young man with the senatorial countenance came to us with a great reputation made at Emory and Henry as a debater and orator. Incidentally his coming depopulated the precinct of friendship.

Fred came to us fresh from the fields of France where he had just completed eighteen months of honorable service with the forces of Uncle Sam, having volunteered soon after the outbreak of the war.

While with us he has made a host of lasting friends by his continued good nature and untiring efforts to assist every one in every way. Besides being one of "Boss's" standbys, Fred has won many honors on the campus, among them being President of the Harding-Coolidge-Slemp Club. He was also selected to uphold his party in the joint political discussion and was a big gun in the party that took the swing through the Valley during the campaign.

If hard work, honesty of purpose and uprightness of character count for anything, Fred's classmates can see nothing ahead of him except a future filled with brilliant successes.

To the Class of '21 this sketch must seem mere "surplusage." Everybody knows "X," and all that know him like him. He has that indefinable personality which we naturally love and admire. He was a leader from the start and an authority as well. On a question of law he seemed unable to give an incorrect answer. "X" survived V. M. I. with honors as one of its youngest graduates and we absolutely believe he is the best man that Institution ever turned out. When the war came, he volunteered and was given the rank of captain, being stationed at various camps as Instructor in Military Science and as Judge Advocate. Since the war, Tucker Hall has been his domicile, and there he has made his mark. "X" passed the State Bar last June, and out of regard for his unusual ability, he was elected President of the Class of '21. "X" was the "little Corsican" in campus politics; notwithstanding, he is well characterized by "Judge" Campbell's remark: "Mr. P-a-w-s-o-n-s always has a smile and a good word." If he doesn't make a great lawyer, nothing but "an act of God" can save the rest of us.

"Our greatest, yet with least pretense."

"Red" was also caught by that impulse which overtakes every ambitious man, causing him to realize the necessity of an efficient University training, and upon a moment's reflection he naturally yielded to the influence of "Lefty's Bulletin" and immediately enrolled in the School of Law, September, 1919.

"Red" is a diligent worker, and the class has more than once marveled at the accuracy with which he states his case. He says that his success in law is due to identically the same thing as his success with the fairer sex, to wit, "She is all done with a system." It is not only known that "Red" will soon be classed among the brilliant lawyers of the country, but it is strongly anticipated that the western part of the Old Dominion will soon be encircled by the influence of a new leader.

And still another West Virginian has passed through Washington and Lee, trailing clouds of glory as he went. We who have known Ross at old W. & L. U. feel assured of his future and the fame of West Virginia and of Bluefield in particular. Quiet and unassuming, he is one of the most popular men in the class.

Ross is what we should be pleased to call an all-round college man—an exponent of the Terpsichorean pleasures, sometimes indulges in a little game of "bil-yards," possesses a pronounced ability to solve the problems of law, and is a friend of the highest and noblest type.

When he leaves, a big vacancy will be left on the campus, but we have the consolation of knowing that what we lose someone else will gain.

Richard Paul Sanford
Stuart, Virginia

Σ Φ E; Varsity Football '19

Gentle readers, behold the only member of our class from the great "Free State of Patrick," where he enjoys her sunshine by day if not her moonshine by night.

After three years spent at Richmond College, Paul came to us in the fall of 1919, and when the clarion voice of Coach Raftery was heard on Wilson Field calling for all "who have grit mingled with your protoplasm," "Sandy" was among the first to obey the summons. He proved as gallant as Fitz-James or Roderic Dhu, and will go down in the history of Generaldom as one of her greatest stars. His achievements are not confined to athletics, for while acquainting himself with an intricate knowledge of law, he has won the hand of one of Lexington's most attractive daughters.

"Sandy," with your logical argument and persuasive eloquence, it will take no flight of fancy to imagine the jury returning a verdict of "Not Guilty."

Realizing the keen necessity of a "regular" University training, and upon weighing the advantages afforded by numerous other schools throughout the country, "Livesaw" fortunately yielded to the allurements of Washington and Lee, and enrolled in the School of Law in September, 1919.

He evidently prepares his daily work with "white hot concentration." He can brief a case with amazing rapidity, and quote Mr. Blackstone with profound accuracy, yea, verbatim! While "Livesaw" has been diligent ab initio to the end, he has always found ample time to devote to the fairer sex. He promises to be a brilliant light in his chosen profession, particularly in the administration of justice, and it is generally conceded by the members of his class that his journey upon the legal path of American jurisprudence will not end until he has adorned the Supreme Court Bench of the United States.

If you were to say Clarence Marvin Shelton, there might be just a few who would not know to whom you were referring, but just mention "Tex" Shelton, and we'll wager that there isn't a man in this University who would not recognize the one referred to. That's what a reputation will do for a person, and "Tex" sure has a great rep. He is generally recognized as the greatest piano player that has been at Washington and Lee.

But don't think that "Tex" is only a musician. He is that and a whole lot besides. Three years ago he left school to join the other men fighting for their country. He served with distinction as ensign in the naval aviation division of the forces, but with the end of the war and after receiving his honorable discharge, "Tex" decided to complete his education and came to Lexington, matriculating in the Washington and Lee Law School. While here he has taken an active part in all student activities and has made a host of friends on the campus. It is with a sense of the deepest regret that they will see him leave in June.

"Joe" is a rugged, powerful young Hercules both in mind and body, who used excellent judgment in 1917 and came to Washington and Lee from V. M. I. His rise to a position of power and prominence on the campus has been as steady as it has been deserved.

"Bullet Joe" could not only write a book on "Football—How She Is Played," but he could illustrate it most effectively with pictures taken of himself in action on the gridiron. Fullbacks of "Joe's" calibre are rare fowls and the Varsity's enviable position in the sportlight for the past three years was materially strengthened by the brilliancy of his playing. In recognition of his exploits with the pigskin, sport writers throughout the South chose him All-South Atlantic Fullback both last year and this.

In track, "Joe" has also proved a valuable man, winning a monogram last year for his ability in hurling the discus.

When "Joe" goes into business in his home town we don't see how he can help succeeding.

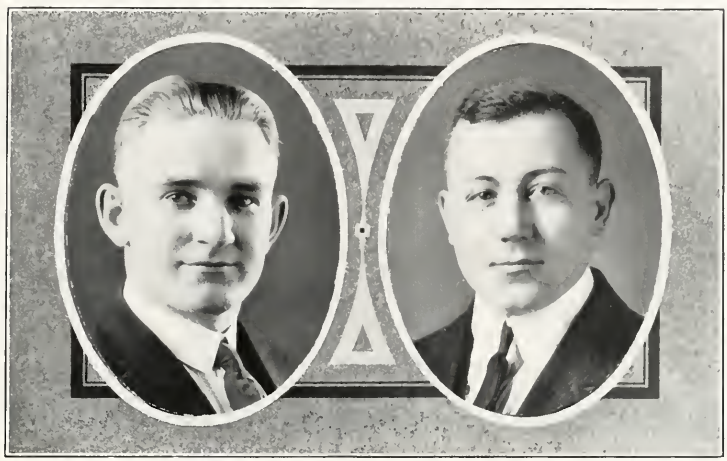
After traveling hither, thither and yon, to various colleges for several years in quest of an A.B. degree, and after studying the sun, moon, and stars from the pilot's seat of a big navy hydroplane as a 1st Lieutenant during the war, Austin "Tornado" "Music" Taylor finally landed in Lexington to cast his lot with W. & L. The Law School claimed him. His record as a student has been phenomenal; very few there are who do not remember his ninety-nine in Sales, not to mention his high general average.

His activities have not been confined to the study of law alone. "Music" was the leader of the "Jazz Kings" and the "All-Southern Seven." His figure is a landmark at McCrum's, and when there is a "party" he is always present. He has been a constant source of delight to all of the girls at the dances, not only with his fiddle and light feet, but also with——, guess. He is a very generous hearted boy, for who hasn't heard him give the entire town "Back to the Indians"? Altogether, he is the kind of fellow that one likes to meet, to be with, and is sure to remember. W. & L. loses one of her very best men, well rounded in every respect.



Daniel Albert Taylor
Liberty, Kentucky

When the doors of Tucker Hall were opened in the fall of 1919, Kentucky was represented in that grand rush for admission by one of her stalwart and thoroughbred sons, "Dan" Taylor, who had just been relieved of the honorable duty of representing the United States in France during the world war.

"Dan" first became conspicuous as a staunch Republican supporter, and during the recent campaign he electrified audiences both in school and in the "wilds of Kentucky" with his superb oratory. Let us not forget that it was none other than "Dan" who stated that seventy per cent of the Democrats voted against the measure and forty per cent for it.

Taylor is numbered as one of the sharks of his class and stands near the head of the list. He has made excellent grades in all subjects and has never answered "unprepared." He is held in high esteem by his classmates as a legal authority upon all questions. We predict for "Dan" a most prosperous future before the Bar.

John William Tisdale
Clarksville, Virginia

Business Manager of Mink '20-'21

Behold this Sunday School teacher and politician. He came with the spray of the briny deep upon him. We are told that he met with some difficulty in obtaining his discharge but the "Red Fox" could not be baffled. Relying on the biblical assurance that the prayers of the righteous availeth much, he besought his chaplain to aid in this undertaking and aroused his latent sympathies by apparent anxiety to spread the gospel among men. The discharged list was rearranged and the name of John W. was at the top.

In politics he is no amateur. Although in school less than a year he was elected Business Manager of the Mink. As the people's candidate he conducted a campaign that would smother the face of Will Hayes. "The Manager" was elected by such a majority that Pat Collins exclaimed, "By Gosh, the Red Fox got them all." Since that time he has borne that cognomen.

John W., the Class of '21 is proud of you.

"Bill" entered the School of Law, September, 1919, and no sooner had he entered than his fellow-students began to recognize his ability as a leader; and, as an organizer, he is a second Will Hayes.

"Bill" is a southern gentleman of the old school, and with his broad principles he promises to be a statesman of the Calhoun type. His calibre as an orator ranks with that of Daniel Webster, and this he proved last fall in a joint political discussion where he not only swayed the audience to the views of "Jimmie Cox," but held the most staunch Republicans breathless. It is not only predicted by the members of his class but it is conceded by the entire student body that no man has a more promising future as a statesman than "Bill" Tuck.

"T" came to Washington and Lee with a degree already tacked onto his name, having received an A.B. at Western Maryland University. Desiring to obtain as fine an education as possible he came to W. & L. as the place for his "P.G.," and in 1919 entered the Law School where his ability and popularity soon won for him the honor of the presidency of the Intermediate Law Class. Wolford did not leave home for some reason (probably feminine), at the first of this session, but entered the Law School at Georgetown where he stayed until he saw the W. & L.—Georgetown game. That settled it, and since January he has been with us again. Torrence gets his degree in June, and his many friends, although regretting to see him leave, wish him all success.

"Dick" Wood, as he is familiarly called by all who know him, and let it be said we all know him, came in as a regular in the fall of 1919 and since that time has made himself either a valuable asset or a terrible liability to the college, depending of course, upon the point of view of the person doing the viewing. But laying all joking aside we must agree with "Dick" that without him, Washington and Lee would not have been what it has during the past two years. When he leaves with his law degree in June, one of the best liked men will be gone from the campus. Realizing that to have friends one must show himself friendly, "Dick" has shown himself a real friend and has won the friendship of many. Also on the dance floor he has made his fame and the ladies all admit that "he's just the nicest man."

Here's luck to you, "Dick," when you start out for yourself, and if you still persevere as you have done here, you cannot help making one of the best lawyers that Old Virginia has ever seen.

The clouds of the European war had not begun to gather when Bruce first made his appearance on the campus in the fall of 1913. He realized that his country might some day need him, so he stole a march on his class and secured his A.B. in June, 1916, after but three years' residence. Then moving over to Tucker Hall he was able to complete one year of work in law before the call of the country came in the spring of 1917. The next two years found Bruce an ensign in naval aviation, but after the war-clouds rolled by, he returned to W. & L. to complete his education.

One would think that the above record was sufficient in itself. But Bruce found time to be a rattling good fellow and to cop more than his full share of college honors in addition to the two degrees.

When "J" is not busy in the Chemical laboratory his specialty is golf and he spends most of his time on the Links. He has tied every record made on the local course.

Among the contributions of Tazewell County to Washington and Lee in the fall of 1917 was one "Sam" Baylor. When Dean Campbell first saw the young Freshman he was reminded of a Phi Beta Kappa brother who had preceded him. In his characteristic manner, Dean "Harry" told this "Freshie" what was expected of him. "Sam" said "Yes, Sir," and did it. He has an almost perfect record of attendance at classes, gymnasium, and dances. For three years in succession he won departmental scholarships in Latin, History and English, respectively. His work in the latter subject won his initiation to Sigma Upsilon.

While not a shark at pushing balls over the green baize, "Sam" has not been averse to an occasional visit to the popular winter resort, from which we may conclude that he has made a most pleasant sojourn in college and has succeeded in securing excellent grades without sacrificing the joys of association with his fellow-students.

Milling Bernstein also had a taste of the life at another college before he could decide that Washington and Lee was the place for him. But when he did make up his mind—Oh, Boy! he pulled right out up here and has stayed here ever since.

While here, Milling has been prominent in the social life about the campus. His presence is a necessary prerequisite to every dance, and his illuminating countenance is a very desirable part of a good many classes with which he has found it rather hard to escape contact.

Dependable in every respect, a faithful and successful student, a true and genial friend, his departure this finals will be a loss to his many friends that will be keenly felt. The girls also will feel the absence of this young "Don Quixote" who has caused many of their hearts to palpitate while in his presence.

Hailing from the far off land of China, Daniel Blain entered W. and L. in the fall of '16, and to-day it can be said sincerely that no man in college is better liked or more respected than is Blain. Not only has he taken part in a great diversity of campus activities but he has proven himself a leader in every branch of activity that he has entered, from athletics and publications, to "Y" work.

In the summer of '18, Blain returned to China to visit his parents for a year, who are missionaries there, and while there he held the position of athletic coach and instructor in English at Hangchow Christian College.

Returning to America the next summer, "D" immediately resumed his place in campus limelight, and was elected Editor of the '21 Calyx.

"Dan" expects to do graduate work in Physical Education during the next three years and then return to China where he will be a member of the Hangchow Christian College Faculty.

Heralded only by an excellent record at the Lexington High School, John entered Washington and Lee with the Class of '21. Riding back and forth from his home five miles out of town, this infant prodigy, for he is only nineteen, made the professors sit up and take notice—and also smile, of which any Freshman may well be proud. For John began right straight to slay "A's" with the confidence and facility of a David, and what is more, never a subject has faced him that did not eventually give up its ghost—which is an "A."

And yet, John is not a bookworm, as his record and natural reserve might indicate. To be sure, he does not care for the swirl in the social vortex and all that, but is ever alert and interested in contemporary affairs.

He has also shown his gift of mind by using the gym instead of Bill Higgins' pool parlor as a place of exercise, and has become a "shark" at handball as well as at his studies. We predict for him a brilliant future.

Born and reared in the swamps of Louisiana, educated in the mountains of Tennessee and Virginia, he will return to his native swamps again to become a great influence in molding the commercial and financial organizations of his State.

He has taken a lively interest in all of the activities of the campus, and during his stay he has become thoroughly imbibed with the "old spirit(s)." Washington and Lee will miss him.

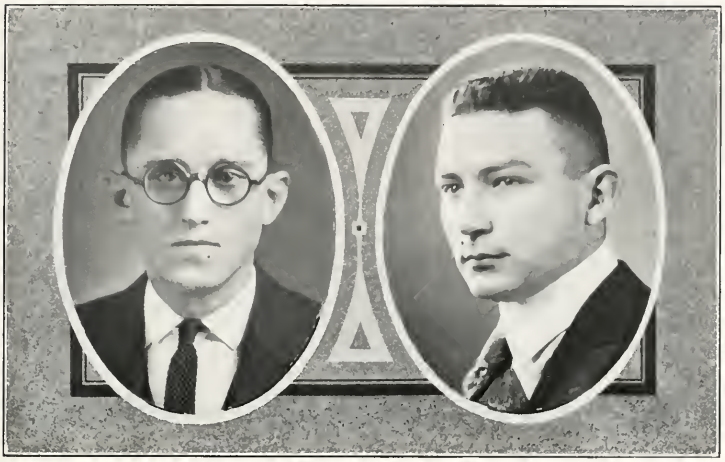
Everybody knows "Gander" Bryan. Whether as the successful manager of the 1920 Football Team, as Varsity trainer during the S. A. T. C., as Business Manager of the Ring-tum Phi, or as chief cook and bottle washer of the Beanery Annex. "Gander" is known and liked throughout the campus.

Bryan came to Washington and Lee in 1917, and from the beginning has entered into campus activities as a worker. A member of the "dirty five" basketball scrubs his first year, and trainer in 1918 for the football team, he has been connected with athletics during his whole college career, finally attaining the coveted position of football manager his senior year. His business ability has been further demonstrated in the financing of the Ring-tum Phi, and as head of one of the college dining halls.

"Gander" will get his degree this year, and will go out one of the most popular and best known men of his class.



William Tipton Caldwell

Cross Country Team '19 and '20; Track Team '19-'20; History Scholarship; Latin Scholarship

"Tip" came in with the dark and dreary days of the S. A. T. C. He immediately buckled down to work and has been at it ever since. Due to his unusual ability and wonderful perseverance he is carrying off the ordinary four-year degree in three years. Besides that he has made the Honor Roll every time since he has been here. His special favorites seem to be German and History and in each of these he is the envy of the less fortunate ones.

Although Caldwell has always emphasized the scholastic side of college life, he has by no means overemphasized it. During his short stay he has been a vital asset to the cross country and track teams. He has also made numerous friends and when he leaves he will carry with him the respect and best wishes of the entire student body.

Lazy, good-natured old Louisiana chose "Cohnie" as one of her favorite sons twenty-one years ago, and since that time Louis has charmed all who have come into contact with him by the true chivalry, the sound common sense and the cheerful temperament that is his as the gift of his native State.

After an excellent record in the Monroe High School, he entered Washington and Lee in 1917 and all at once acquired the strong friendship of faculty and students alike. He did very well in his studies and showed the school what a real tennis player is. During the S. A. T. C., he, as corporal, clearly convinced all that there is considerable iron in his character. He is specializing in the School of Commerce and will undoubtedly receive his degree in June.

Willis Mead Everett, Jr., came from Peacock High in Atlanta in the fall of 1916. Since the first day he has been gathering friends from every part of the campus, and now can boast of a host of admirers in every part of the country. Possessed of a good physique, Willis has been on the cross country squad and also given his services to the track team, although heavy laboratory work has always interfered with his athletic ambitions.

But it is on the dance floor and in society's vortex that the subject of this sketch is a shining light. Never absent from even the smallest hop, and always glad to delight the ladies with his presence, Willis has made himself part of all such festivities here at Washington and Lee. Coming as a fitting climax to his college career, was the announcement that Everett would lead the Annual Bal Masque as Chu Chin Chow.

Needless to say, Willis has earned the good will of the entire student body, and goes out bearing their best wishes for every success.

Two things of tremendous significance occurred on the 15th of September, 1916. (1) The sun rose and (2) "Fitz" Flournoy bestowed himself upon Washington and Lee. The young Virginia gentleman early displayed a marked taste for scholastic attainment and quickly removed himself as far from the "automatic" as Russia is from Utopia, which is to say his very presence symbolized the coveted "A."

His third year was interrupted by illness contracted in military service, but the spring of '19 found him again at school. The Elizabethan Poets, and native cookery (testified by at least seven boarding-house matrons) were his favorite hobbies. His career with us is marked by brilliant literary achievements and an active interest in all college publications.

Coming to W. & L. well prepared from Shenandoah Collegiate Institute, Dayton, Va., this product of Rockingham County has succeeded in completing the requirements for a B.A. degree in three years. In addition to being a time-saver, he is thorough, and has the enviable record of having made the Honor Roll practically every term since his arrival.

During Gray's stay on the campus, he has made more than the usual number of warm friends. Besides excelling in the realm of scholarship, he has been very successful in college activities, especially on the student publications. The "Y" selected him to take charge of its tutoring department this year, and he has made a success of the work. Also, this versatile young man is a tennis player of considerable skill, as well as a good handball player.

He is undecided as to just where he will devote his many talents and ceaseless energy, but we predict that he will be either a first rate prof or a fine business executive.

Harry Louis Goff

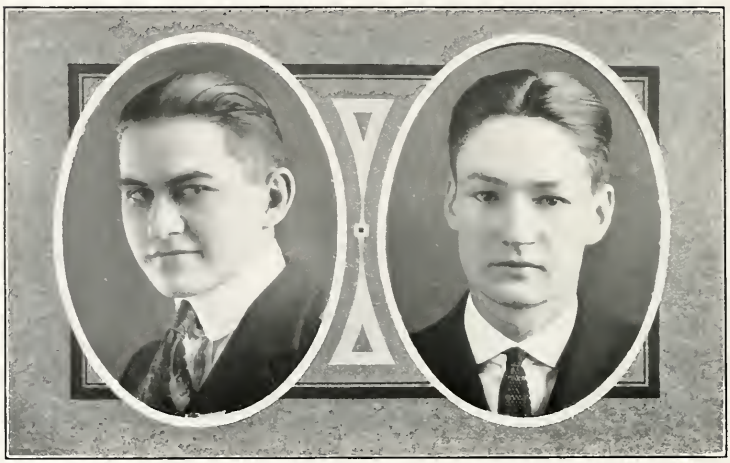
X Γ Θ; German Scholarship

It is usually customary to call a man by his shortest name, and if that is not short enough, to create or manipulate a name for him. But "Goff" satisfied all the requirements and he regularly goes by that name now. Coming to Washington and Lee in 1919 with advanced standing, he has done his work and is just waiting until he can convince the faculty that that is just a beginning of his knowledge.

With his entrance into the University, the profs have decided that another is to be added to the already large number belonging to the Class Pisces, to the Species Shark. Hopping such courses as Ethics and French 12 for crips, he has proved the old adage that anything is easy for the man who knows it. And Man, but he does know it!

We predict great success for Goff in whatever he may choose as his field of endeavor.



Rutherford Roland Hall
Moorefield, West Virginia

Σ Τ; Ring-tum Phi Editor-in-Chief '20-'21, Staff '18-'19, '19-'20; English Scholarship '18-'19; President and Vice-President Literary Society '18-'19; "General Utility Man" in Y. M. C. A.

Hailing from Lexington, Mo., High School, this young man of literary talents came to another Lexington to complete his higher education. Moorefield, W. Va., now claims the honor of his residence. Although entering college rather young, Roland soon began to show his ability along scholastic lines by winning the English Scholarship in his Sophomore year. Scholarship not an end in itself, but as a means to a broader viewpoint has been his aim, and his many friends have watched his rapid development with much pleasure. Especially along journalistic lines has he developed his versatile ability, which has culminated in the Editorship of the Ring-tum Phi.

Not by any means a bookworm, yet one of the brightest men on the campus, Roland has made an enviable record while at Washington and Lee. Prominent in literary society work, interested in all college activities, especially the Y. M. C. A., popular with students and faculty, he goes forth indeed a worthy produet of the University.

Philip Guy Harris
Spartanburg, South Carolina

K Σ; President Senior Academic; Varsity Basketball

After spending two years at Wofford College, "Phil" saw the error of his ways, and entered Washington and Lee as a Sophomore in 1918. While at Wofford he gained some experience as a basketball player, being a member of the Varsity both years. He has apparently lost none of his ability, for he has been on the Varsity squad for two years at W. & L., and is making a very strong bid for a position on the first team this year.

Phil's cheery smile, genial good nature, and sterling qualities have made him a host of friends on the campus. The high esteem in which he is held by his classmates is attested by the fact that he was elected President of the Senior Academic Class.

Solly Albert Hartzo

Atlanta, Texas

Η Κ Α; W. F.; Calyx Staff '17-'18, Assistant Editor-in-Chief '19-'20; Ring-tum Phi Staff '17-'18, Managing Editor '19-'20

Solly is a product of Texas, having been born in Marion County in 1897. He completed his preparatory school work at the Atlanta High School in 1915, and then Southwestern University claimed his attention for a year or so. Convinced that he could do better in the pursuit of knowledge at Washington and Lee, he accordingly made his appearance in Lexington in 1917. He would have obtained his degree last year had the "little unpleasantness" with Germany not interfered with his work.

Aside from doing well in his studies, Solly has taken much interest in things literary, having had much to do with the Ring-tum Phi and Calyx while here. Besides being on both staffs at various times, he was Associate Editor of Calyx in '17-'18 and Assistant Editor-in-Chief of the Ring-tum Phi in '19-'20.

Solly will devote his efforts to business after obtaining his coveted sheepskin in June.

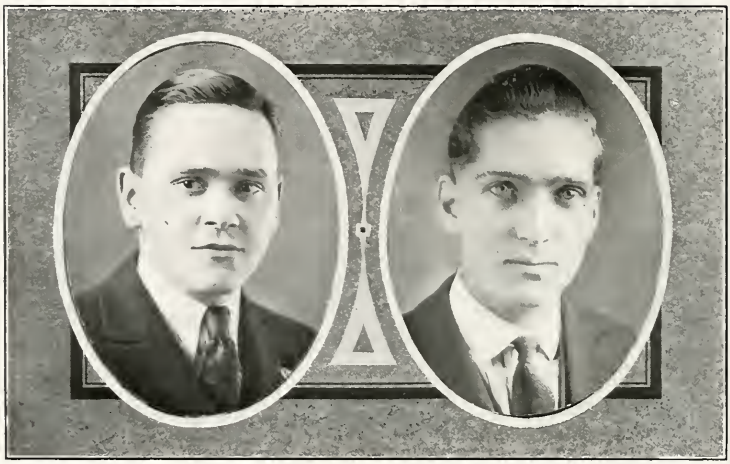
Noble Bascom Hendrix

Κ Α; C. C.; Χ Γ Θ; W. F.

Noble is a man of many parts. Though born in Alabama, he entered our Alma Mater from the State of Georgia after a brilliant career in Boy's High School in Atlanta. After a sojourn of two years at Washington and Lee in the Academic School, Noble abandoned his college career temporarily to become a Professor of History in the High School of Smithville, Texas. One year of teaching was enough, however, so he summered at the University of Texas, where he incidentally acquired a few more college credits. The fall of 1920 found him once more enrolled in the ranks of his former classmates, insistently demanding a degree.

Noble is a splendid student, an excellent logician, and his prowess in argument is indisputable. In four years he has acquired a degree and taught school one year. He is a consummate master of that popular art vulgarly known as "shooting the bull." On the floor of Doremus his grace is indescribable and many are the victims of his line. He starred on the Freshman debating team and on his class football team.

In any profession his enterprise and ability will undoubtedly make him a success.



William Courtney King
Roanoke, Virginia

A T Ω; Ο Δ Κ; Σ; C. C.; Η Α Ν; "13"; Junior Manager Football '19-'20, Executive Committeeman Junior Academic

Born in the Magic City, December 10, 1897, Courtney had plenty of opportunity in the early years of his life to see what kind of a University Washington and Lee really is, for the Generals used to journey to Roanoke every fall to meet their ancient rivals, V. P. I. So it was quite natural that he should enter here as a Freshman in the fall of 1917. Quiet and unassuming, yet with a disposition that brought him friends from the very beginning, he steadily pursued the paths of knowledge and the roads of friendship until he won the respect of the faculty and all the social insignia that his fellow students had to offer. He was Junior manager of football in the fall of 1919, and executive committeeman of his class the same year.

Courtney expects to be a bank president some day, but he will meanwhile continue his education in the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration.

Walthen Riegel Knebelkamp
Louisville, Kentucky

K B Φ; Latin Scholarship; Albert Sidney Boat Club; Senior Class Foothall

Another product of "Old Kaintuck," and like all products of that commonwealth, says that he is proud of it. "Knebel" made his appearance on the campus in September, 1918, and since then has been a vital asset to the student life about college. His first year he worked hard and we recall having seen his name on the Honor Roll of students for that year. For his conscientious work he was rewarded a scholarship in Latin. Since then he has decided that four years is too long for a solid minded, vigorous youth to spend in getting an education, and as a result determined that he would take his A.B. degree in three years.

When "Knebel" leaves us, a prominent figure will be gone from the campus, and he will be missed as all real men and true gentlemen are. Our best wishes accompany him on his departure.

Φ K Σ; W. F.; K B Φ; Assistant in Accounting

"Eddie" hails from somewhere in West Virginia, and if you want to rouse his fighting spirit, just tell him what a bum place that part of the country is, for he never tires of telling of its superiority.

After attending Cornell for a session he journeyed to us during the S. A. T. C., and consequently has been here only three years. With his ability to juggle figures and the theoretical knowledge gained here, we predict that the future will find him an accountant of the rarest type.

As a good friend we know no better, and also we feel sure that when he gets out in the cold, cold world he is going to "eat 'em up."

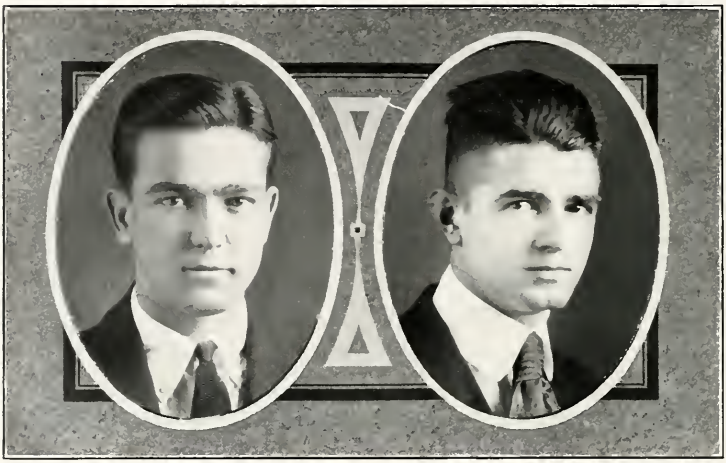
Best luck to you, "Eddie," in the future.

Frank Love
Fayetteville, West Virginia

A X P; Greenbrier Club; Football Squad '17; Baseball Squad '20

"F" appeared on the Washington and Lee campus in the fall of 1917. He is one of those men who can spend his time doing everything but work and yet keep above the "gentleman's grade." It appears that "F" is destined to spend his future in a warmer climate—South America. He is undecided yet as to just which part of the continent he will take over as his share, but it is certain that no matter what field of enterprise he enters, his part will be upheld by the same zeal and determination which he has exhibited all through his college course.

He comes from Fayetteville, W. Va., and received his prep work at Greenbrier Military School where he was a big man (to hear him tell it).



James Daniel McLeod
Hattiesburg, Mississippi

"Dan" came to us in the fall of 1917 from the Hattiesburg High School where he was a "star" student. He has kept up his scholarship record here, but has never let school work interfere with outside activities.

During his four years' stay he has become a landmark at Sweetbriar and in Doremus Gymnasium. He expects to study business administration next year at Eastman Business School, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

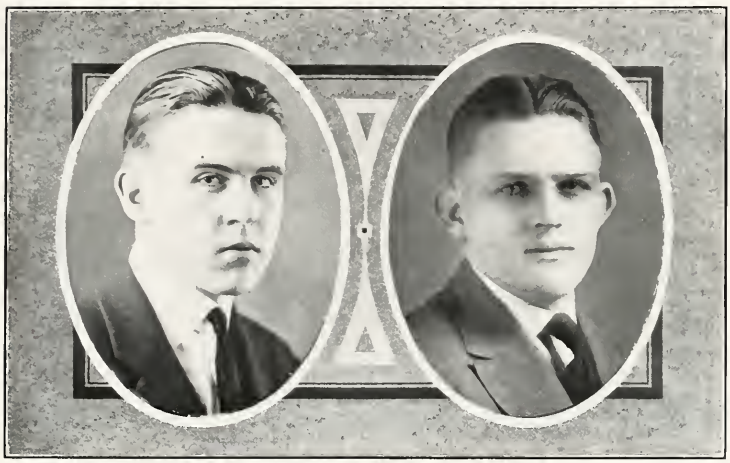
John William Miller
Lexington, Kentucky

Χ Γ Θ; Albert Sidney Boat Club, Coxswain First Crew '20; American Chemical Society; American Association for the Advancement of Science; Assistant in Chemistry

"Johnnie" is another of those students who learn so fast that Washington and Lee can furnish them thought for only three years. Possessing all the qualities of friendship and cordiality reputed to have belonged to the old Kentucky colonel of the last century, Miller came to us in 1918. Since that time he has worked hard, his work being rewarded by the attainment of a degree in only three years.

During the short time that he has been here, he has made many friends and has been at every opportunity all that a good friend should be towards his friends. Although a considerable amount of his time has been spent in the chemical laboratory where he is doing the biggest part of his work, "Johnnie" has found plenty of time for outside activities and for the cultivation of that art—we believe that in this particular case it is an art—of dealing with the fair sex.

When our chemistry shark hits the world, the old rare supposed elements might as well come on out of their hiding, for they will have to reveal their identity as soon as he gets straight after them.



Charles George Gordon Moss
Lynchburg, Virginia

B Θ Π; Ω Δ K; Σ Ψ; Sophomore Assistant Basketball, '19, Junior Assistant, '20, Manager Basketball, '21; Monogram Club; Y. M. C. A. Cabinet '18-'19, '19-'20; President Y. M. C. A. '21; Student Volunteer Band; Assistant Manager Calyx, '19; Albert Sidney Boat Club; Albert Sidney 2nd Crew '19, '20

Gordon came from Lynchburg High School in 1917. Like the great man for whom he was named, he has had a purpose in life. Since living on the campus he has exemplified that purpose, namely, service to his fellow man in every opportunity that has ever come to him. From the beginning, taking active work in the "Y," he has used his influence at all times for what is right, not content with merely living the right kind of life he has decided to dedicate his existence to the people of China as a missionary.

However, Gordon's activities have been numerous. Always standing around ninety in his average, he is a consistent student. He played on his class football team at guard; rowed on the 2nd Albert Sidney crew two years; and after two years' hard work won the position of manager of the basketball team.

Gordon goes out a well-rounded man who we are sure will make his mark in the world.

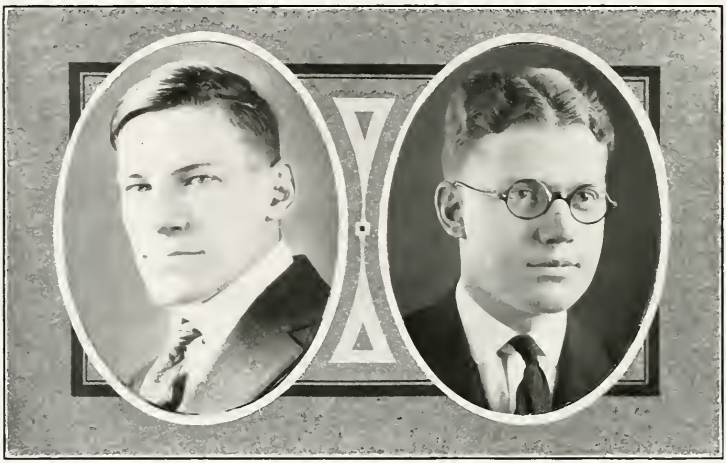
John Lyndell Patterson
Bradford, Tennessee

S. & C.; Manager Baseball 1921; Football Squad '17, '18, '19, '20; Varsity Football, '20; Monogram Club '21; Calyx Staff '20

"Pat" came in with the old Freshman Class of 1917 and has stuck ever since. Whether on the football field, where he has proved himself a steady player, or in the classroom, where he has done good, hard, conscientious work, "J. L." has been a man to be reckoned with.

By reason of his indefatigable energy and wonderful ability as Junior assistant manager of baseball in '19-'20, "Pat" was chosen to manage the baseball season of 1921, and judging from the successful season just closed, we must agree that "Pat" is one of the best managers Washington and Lee has ever had.

"Pat" has also made many friends on the campus and has taken a prominent part in the campus social life. We all agree in wishing him as successful a management of life's problems as he has brought to us in baseball affairs.



William Blackwood Patterson
Sutsien, China

B Θ Π; O Δ K; Σ T; Vice-President Freshman Class '17-'18; Captain Freshman Pushball Team; Calyx Staff '18, '19, '20, '21; Ring-tum Phi Staff; Troubadours '19-'20, '20-'21; Albert Sidney Boat Crew '18, '19, Captain and Stroke '20; Varsity Football '20; Monogram Club; Corp. Co. "B" S. A. T. C.; Y. M. C. A. Cabinet '21

"Bill" Patterson gets his degree and goes out of this institution one of the most admired and respected men in the class. As a Varsity football man "Pat" was noted for his hard fighting qualities and drive, but more especially for the conscientious way in which he did his duty.

"Bill" came over from China several years ago, and prepped in John Marshal High School and Westminster Academy before following in the footsteps of his father and brother in coming to Washington and Lee. During his stay here, "Pat" has participated in athletics, publicational work, dramatics and musical activities, and the Young Men's Christian Association in which he was very active. In these outside activities, however, studies have not been neglected.

Taking as his purpose to do everything within reason that was asked of him for anybody, "Pat" has come close to his ideal, and no one on the campus is more highly thought of in terms of clean, unselfish, vigorous manhood.

Frank Mann Pollock
Bluefield, West Virginia

Φ K Ψ

Frank Pollock was born on June 29, 1900, in Bluefield, West Virginia, which he proudly claims as only a few miles from the old Virginia line. When he came to Washington and Lee in the fall of 1917, he did not toot a brass horn, or wear socks with rings around them, but his acquaintances very soon began to hear from him those quaint and original flashes of quiet wit for which he has since become famous among his friends; and though he says, characteristically, that he is "no shark," we notice that he is taking a certificate in French, which, under the guidance of "Cutie," is considered the stiffest language course in school.

Frank, who is known as the "banker," has in fact the quiet efficiency, the canny good sense, the steady poise, and the ability to get there without making a big "fuss," such as characterizes the twentieth-century business man. Besides that, he has the capacity for making and holding friends, which is probably a result of his having been reared so close to the Virginia line.

Samuel Lucas Raines

"Sam" Raines of Raines, Tennessee, entered Washington and Lee in the bleak September of 1917, after having received the fundamentals of his educational career at the Memphis University School, where his record was as enviable as it has been here. Entering school with a full realization of the task before him, and with the sincere determination to accomplish this task in the true and manly way, "Sammy" has commanded from the first day of his matriculation the respect and admiration of his fellow students. His frank, open manner and his genial disposition have won him a host of friends who will indeed miss him after his graduation.

For three years his timely hits on the diamond have pulled many a game out of the fire, and for four years his side-stepping on the gridiron has been rivaled only by his practical application of that art on the ballroom floor.

Oscar Brownlee Simmons, Jr.
Laurens, South Carolina

Κ Σ

Simmons realized that a degree from Washington and Lee is the most valuable degree in the world, and so came here to finish up his academic work and carry off his degree. Not only that, but he had heard related for so long the many excellencies of Washington and Lee that he just could not refrain from coming up and getting a whiff, at least, of this good old college's atmosphere.

Although he has been here barely one year, Simmons has demonstrated a wonderful ability at making and keeping friends. He has also shown a willingness to study and has achieved considerable scholastic distinction.

His numerous friends wish him nothing but the greatest of successes in whatever he may essay to do.

Lynchburg, Virginia

Σ Φ E; Varsity Football Squad '17-'18; Varsity Basketball Squad '17-'18; Varsity Football S. A. T. C.; Geology Scholarship '20; Secretary-Treasurer Junior Class; Captain Senior Football Team

Having known "Bill" intimately since he first landed in Lexington, we feel a degree of hesitancy in attempting to do him justice in the brief space allotted to us. He is one of the men of whom it may truly be said that he has got the most out of his college life.

He has confined himself to no one field, but has displayed considerable versatility. "Bill" is no mean athlete; he is a regular participant in all social affairs and, at the same time, he is a "shark" without being a "bookworm." His friends are legion, for to know him is to like him, and to know him well is to love him. "Bill" has not yet decided what he will make his life's work, but whatever it may be, we are sure that he will be eminently successful. He has the reputation of doing what he sets out to do.

George Gerald Stone
Wytheville, Virginia

Σ Φ E; W. F.; Executive Committeeman Senior Academic Class; Troubadours; Calyx Staff

Here we have another Southwest Virginia product, and now we wonder no longer why she is proud of them.

George's college life has been roseate with success. His beaming countenance is familiar to all on the campus, and he has acquired the friendship and esteem of those with whom he comes in contact. He was chosen by his classmates to represent them on the Executive Committee in his Senior year, which is a tribute in itself. George is quiet, unassuming, diligent, and persevering, and has cut a niche in the campus life of W. & L. that will remain for years to come.

He expects to follow the noble profession of administering to the suffering and afflicted, and if he is as proficient in healing wounds as he is in wounding hearts, his patients will flock to him from the furthermost corners of the earth. You have the best wishes, George, of the grand old Class of '21 in all of your future undertakings.

Joshua Hoge Tyler Sutherland
Tiny, Virginia

Σ T; Ring-tum Phi Staff; Vice-President Graham-Washington Literary Society

Hoge came in early in 1917 from Tiny, Va., and since that time has made himself an ostensible personage in our august body.

Of course that is nothing unexpected, for he had already made himself the enviable one at the Lebanon State School. There, among other things, he received a medal for declamation and won first place in a State Essay Contest.

Although Hoge is by no means a "bookworm," he has taken a good scholastic standing while here and has felt the pleasure, if such there be, of gracing with his presence the Honor Roll. At the same time he has not forgotten his body and has developed into, we feel like saying, the best handball player on the campus.

Also we have here a man of considerable literary ability and of wonderful literary taste. He has the reputation of writing the most literary letters of any student here, and that no doubt accounts for the number of "janes" with whom he corresponds.

After getting his "dip" in June, Hoge intends to teach for a few years, after which he will probably take up journalism.

Franklin McCown Thompson

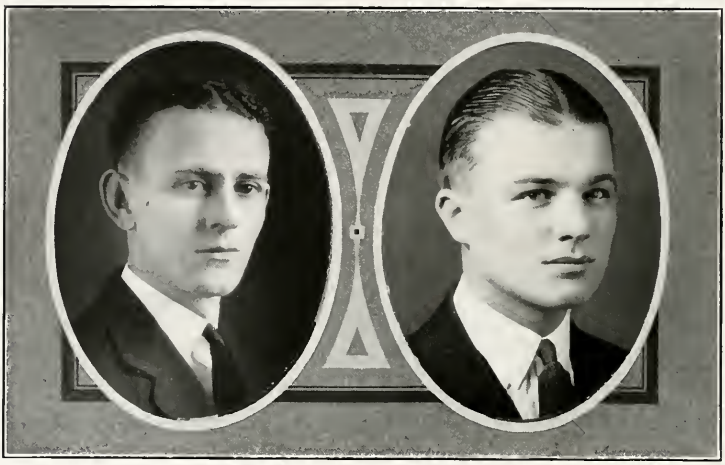
Franklin Thompson, our Brazilian lad, now makes his appearance upon the scene. After one year of great success at Davidson, he took up his residence with Uncle Sam for awhile. But when he received his discharge from the army he decided that better things were in store for him and so came to Washington and Lee. While here he has shown his prowess in various and sundry ways. He is the one "ten second man on the campus," and my, but you ought to see that boy run! He looks just like an aeroplane taking its run before the jump. He has also shown his athletic prowess in connection with the Harry Lee Crew as you will doubtless notice from the positions that he has held in it during the past few years. He says that this year will be the showdown and that the Harry Lees are as sure to win over the Albert Sidneys as if they had already accomplished it.

But that is not all. Franklin also holds the rank of Instructor in Spanish this year, an added accomplishment to one who already had a large number.



Laird Young Thompson
Lexington, Virginia

Σ Φ E; Scholarship in Politics and French, Assistant in Politics; Vice-President Junior Class '19-'20; Historian Freshman Class

"L. Y." came to us from the Lexington High School where he graduated with first honors. The next step was to become a premier "shark" of the Class of '21. And that, my gentle reader, is an honor which few may hope to exceed, for verily the Class of '21 is a class of "sharks." If there is any subject in which he may be said to be best, that subject is Politics, for the "Science of States" is his middle name; at least, "Granny" saw fit to make him his man "Friday" in his Sophomore year, and he has held down that job ever since. (Ask the Freshies how well.)

Laird possesses in abundance what most of us lack entirely, and that is the ability to put his whole soul into whatever he does and to do it well. He expects to practice law and we are sure that he will be one of its very best representatives.

Reginald Ford Trotter

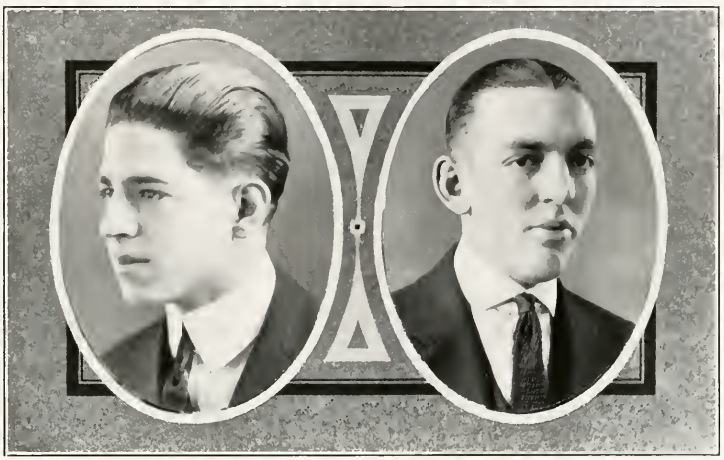
K A; Π A N; C. C.; Secretary-Treasurer, Class of '21 '18-'19; Assistant Manager Basketball '18-'19, Class Basketball '19-'20; Class Football '20-'21; Troubadours '20-'21

"Tiny" Trotter is the last of the distinguished line initiated by Virgil Juan, accelerated by Henry Ford, and consummated by Reginald himself. Monticello was his birthplace and his greatest efforts in college have been to convince his skeptical associates that it is the Mecca of the West. He has passed more courses without buying text books than any student in school, and his classes have been a bed of roses for him, literally as well as figuratively.

As a Freshman he was youth personified—the youngest man in the class. As a Sophomore he was a terror, and the Class of '22 still holds him in awe. As a Junior he was a riotous success and cemented the popularity of his previous two years. As a dignified Senior he was a model of conservatism, relaxing into genial warmth only for his friends who are legion. Throughout his college career his social endeavors have ever met with success and on the dance floor his sinuous grace is delightful to behold. During his four years on the campus, "Runt" has been one of the best-liked men in school, and we predict for him, unbounded success in after life.



Edward Lynn Westbrooke, Jr.
Jonesboro, Arkansas

Β Θ Π; Χ Γ Θ; Chemistry Assistant '20-'21; Combined Musical Clubs '18; Albert Sidney Boat Club; Secretary and Treasurer Senior Class

"Eddie" was pointed out in his freshman year as a man who quietly pursued his own way, never interfering with upperclassmen, unobtrusive, reserved, and a gentleman in the finest sense of the word. But under the quiet exterior, is a mind trained by consistent work in the classroom, an interest in college activities which has been rewarded by two offices in his class, and a dependability which brings his name in mind when a hard job has to be done.

Majoring in Chemistry, "Eddie" was made Chemistry Assistant his senior year. The many hours spent by him in the lab. working out formulas in Chem. 2, or the experience in running a furnace he got in Chem. 192, might each be sufficient to stamp him as an ambitious follower of Dr. Howe. But we believe "Eddie" will have a hard time resisting the allurements of some social life, judging from the excellence of his dancing, and so we hope that in the midst of any "grind" he may plan out for himself in the realm of Chemistry, he will always have time to join his friends in "the mad whirl of the dance."

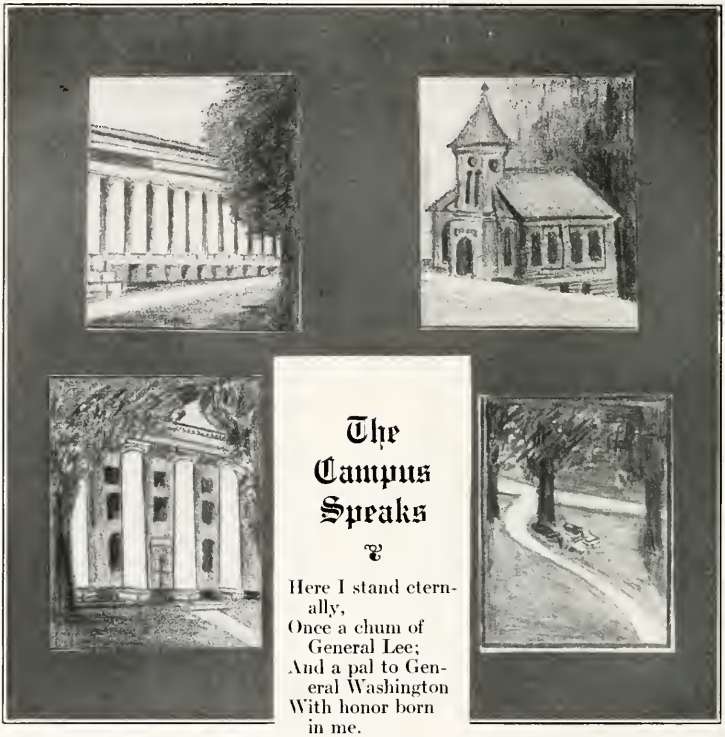
"Willie B." prepped at Manual Training School, New Orleans, and matriculated at Washington and Lee in September, 1917, exactly fifty years after his father's entrance into the same institution. "Willie" early embarked upon a literary career, finding a place on the Ring-tum Phi staff his Freshman year, and since then has been a literary authority on the campus. His philosophical dogmas are accepted without qualification by the admiring hoi-polloi who have never satisfactorily analyzed the complexities of existence for themselves.

Though "Willie" is not famed as an intercollegiate athlete, nevertheless he has been a close student of the four major sports, and his ability as a sporting editor has made his name a synonym for Walter Camp on the campus.

His prowess as a dancer has been recognized by his unanimous choice for two years as coach for the Washington and Lee dancing team—the feminine heart trembling with joyous expectation at this tea-hound's approach.



The Campus Speaks

Here I stand eternally,
Once a chum of General Lee;
And a pal to General Washington
With honor born in me.

Just a college campus,
With the usual nooks and crooks,
Where men from classes gaily fling
Their notes and pads and books.
Each year I see the Freshmen come,
With resolutions firm,
To make Phi Beta Kappa
In just a single term.
I hear their tales of gladness
Beneath my friendly trees;
I know their tales of sadness
And what would each one please.
Thus gradually forms a friendship
Lasting long and true;
There's not a "General" whom I scorn!
I am a friend to you.

Stuart Briscoe is one of those fellows that you like better the more you know of him. Possessing a genial disposition, a charming personality and an enviable philosophy of life, he has shown himself a real friend during his stay at college. Registered in the Engineering School he has made for himself a desirable record as a student. Not only that, but he has taken an active interest in all important student activities. In the Y. M. C. Stuart this year holds a position as Assistant in the Engineering Department and is getting valuable experience to aid him in carrying on his work successfully when he leaves with his B.S. in June. He carries with him the best wishes of the faculty and students.

George came to us in 1918 after two years at Centre College, Kentucky, and immediately won his way into the hearts of all who were lucky enough to know him. Thoroughly a man, George realized the importance of study, and as a result, has been known since his arrival here as an excellent student. Always interested in anything for the betterment of W. & L., and because of his unfailing support and loyalty to the University, he was elected to the Executive Committee, which is one of the highest honors his classmates could bestow upon him.

Summing up, we find George quiet, determined and studious—three traits commendable in anyone—a true friend and a loyal "General." We who have had the pleasure of knowing him predict a great future for him and we bid him goodbye with every wish for success.

John Boyd Hoke

Φ K Ψ; Engineering Society

Realizing from the start that the proper place for a man of his ability could be only at Washington and Lee, Hoke came to Lexington in the fall of 1917. Since then his fame added to that of the rest of the class has made the Class of '21 famous. In his class work, Hoke has done well. In math he has even developed into a "shark," and this year he keeps the professor and the other members of Senior math guessing as to just what original method he will devise next for the solution of problems in Analytics and Higher Calculus. In engineering, likewise, he belongs to the "shark" branch of the piscatorial species.

But it is not alone in his studies that Hoke has shown himself a leader. On the campus everyone is reckoned his friend, and quietly and without ado Hoke exercises his influence. His many friends wish him great success in his chosen field of endeavor.

"Ike" hails from Upperville, Virginia, admits it, but never boasts of it. He assures us that this fair town does exist and is just outside of Washington. We'll take his word for it.

After taking a postgraduate course at Episcopal High School, he entered Washington in the fall of 1917 to pursue scientific courses. He did this and incidentally received grades which rank him among the best in the School of Science.

For three years, "Ike" succeeded in maintaining an adamantine barrier which no girl was able to penetrate; however, in his fourth year this reserve melted before the attacks of the little god of the bow and arrows.

Although "Ike" has been one of our most diligent students, yet he has found time to take part in numerous outside activities, leading the Junior Prom, managing the track team for two years, and being President of the Junior Class.

"Mac" made his initial appearance on this mortal coil August 17, 1900, in the Capital City of the Old Dominion. After passing a rather uneventful period of childhood, he entered Richmond Academy, from which he emerged in 1917 with one of "Leftie's" renowned scholarships. Arriving in Lexington in the fall of the same year he soon had his name mentioned along with those belonging to the genus "shark." "Liv's" Math 2 went down before his onslaughts his first year, and the higher branches of this subject being to him mere play, he migrated to Reid Hall where he soon had the "profs" crying for mercy, the only blot on his escutcheon is a "C" in "Grann's" Politics I, but this fall from grace can be excused when we consider his scholastic honors.

"Mac's" life work will be engineering.

————"Know ye by all these presents; Greetings;"

Washington and Lee is ridding itself of its greatest burden. Lewis Stansbury Musgrove after a prolonged sojourn of many years' duration has at last attained the required state of efficiency and has been awarded a degree. Great joy for all aspirants to social honors because "Mus" has had a monopoly on them for years; but great sorrow for all "Intercollegiate Prom Trotters" because Lewis has been a constant source of joy and delight and his absence will be keenly felt by all. Aside from being a veritable lion in the social affairs on the campus, Lewis has gone into other fields and has displayed his genius, achieving success at every turn. He has one eye on the Supreme Bench and the other on the great iron industry; we do not know which will attract and claim him. We predict success in either of the two or in any of the countless others.

Melvin Willard Parse

Engineering Society; Assistant in Engineering, '19-'20, '20-'21; President Engineering Society '21

Oh! You are looking for a real man and a true gentleman? Then hunt up Melvin Parse.

Melvin came to us in 1919 after his discharge from the army, and due to previous training at Arkansas College, he is carrying off his degree with the Class of '21 and doing it well, too, so the professors tell us.

When the war began, Melvin, as a real red-blooded man from Arkansas, waited only until he was eighteen to join the colors and saw service in numerous training camps on this side of the water with the rank of sergeant first class. He says that he thoroughly sympathizes with Leonard Wood in his inability to get across.

During his short stay here, Melvin has made many friends and has proved himself a leader of the first rank, taking part in all activities from politics to football.

Melvin is determined to make a great success as a civil engineer, and judging from all indications, he can't help doing it.

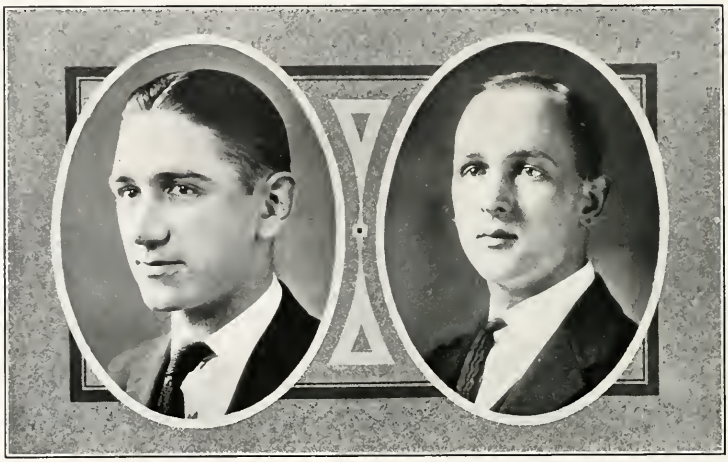
Benjamin Wissler Partlow
Staunton, Virginia

X Γ Θ; Vice-President Senior Science; Cross Country Team, '19-'20, '20-'21; Albert Sidney Boat Crew

Entering Washington and Lee from Staunton Military Academy with the grand Class of '21, "Ben" let it be known at once that he was here for the purpose of getting a B.S. in Chemistry. Rooming two miles out of town, he walked back and forth each day to his classes, and often worked in the "lab" until far into the night. With such a spirit he has continued to tackle all the problems set before him in college life and has won respect and a good standing in his classes through sheer force of character and hard work.

Not alone is "Ben" a well known fixture in the laboratory, but he has made good as a cross country runner, making the team for two years. "Ben" is also known on the campus to a large extent, as well as in Harrisonburg, whither he is known to make frequent visits.

His classmates wish him God-speed in his life's chosen field of Chemical Engineering, in which he intends to study at Johns Hopkins next year.



Robert Blair Price
Farmville, Virginia

K A; X Γ Θ; Π Λ N; C. C.; Monogram Club; Varsity Track '20 and '21; Captain '21 Track Team

Just because a man is born at Hampden Sidney, Va., isn't any reason why he has to go to Hampden Sidney College. Thus reasoned one Robert Blair Price. Born on the sixth day of December, 1899, just in time to belong to the last century, constitutes the birth record of this young gentleman. Later in life he moved to the more thriving metropolis of Farmville and there he remained until the fall of 1917. At that time he descended upon Lexington amid a rain storm, a cloud of smoke and the Virginia Creeper to attack the School of Science. Since that time he has made his presence felt in almost every branch of college activity. Known to the ladies as an "adorable dancer," to the professors as a steady, consistent student, to the athletes as a good track man and to his friends as a regular fellow, such a man is Blair.

B Θ Π; O Δ K; Δ Σ P; X Γ Θ; Debating Council '18-'19, '19-'20; Secretary Graham-Washington Literary Society '18-'19; Sergeant S. A. T. C.; Ring-tum Phi Staff '17-'18, '18-'19, Editor-in-Chief Ring-tum Phi '19-'20; Calyx Staff '18-'19, 19-'20; Assistant Editor Calyx '20-'21; Assistant Editor Mink '20-'21; Intercollegiate Debate '18, '19

"Bill" entered W. and L. in the fall of 1917. Shortly after his matriculation he identified himself with the Ring-tum Phi, making the staff, and his college life since has been one long round of outside activity, during which he has found time to make grades which classify him as a good student. His activities on the campus have been as varied as the winter weather, ranging from a Delta Sigma Rho key in his Sophomore year to the Editorship of the Ring-tum Phi and an Omicron Delta Kappa key his Junior term.

While his fields of endeavor have been distinctly literary, "Bill s" successes have been in no way limited to such a narrow scope. He has found time to give his services unstintingly to the University, making talks at preparatory schools and he has been active with the "Y".

Finally, when William J. leaves here his absence will be keenly felt. He has acquired the reputation of a worker, on the campus, and his position will not be easily filled.

David Carlisle Storey
Houston, Texas

Φ Γ Δ; Π A N; Engineering Society; Class Basketball four years, Captain Junior Basketball Team

It is said that some people are born with gold spoons in their mouths, some people acquire them and some have gold spoons thrust between their teeth. We don't know how it got there but David Carlisle Storey certainly has one in his mouth, or sometimes we think the gold is in his head or better still it comes to our mind that his head is valuable, the value being reckoned in terms of gold. For the way that boy does hit 'em over in the Engineering School would make an ordinary person dizzy.

But let's lay aside all joking, except that we don't joke, and come to a short discussion of his many attainments while here on the campus. It is useless to mention the fact that although he has been mainly occupied with his studies, he has found time to make a large number of loyal friends and has mixed in all the activities that we associate with a good sport. On leaving, Storey will take with him the good will of the entire student body.

James Roy Stuart
Versailles, Kentucky

Φ K Ψ; W. F.; Engineering Society; Albert Sidney Boat Club

Since February 20, 1898, when "Jabe" Stuart began his career at Winchester, Ky., his long legs have been growing longer, while he has been tripping about in the blue grass of his native State, or on the polished floor of the Doremus Gymnasium. But do not gather from the above that "Jabe" is only an old tea hound.

Since he came to W. & L. in the fall of 1917, he has safely treaded the mazes of the Engineering School; he has rowed on the Albert Sidney Boat Crew, and gained the name of a true man and a true friend. He graduates with the degree of B.S., and expects to go to Cornell to specialize in electrical engineering; but we have a notion that he loves Kentucky horses, and other Kentucky products, too well to take up the roving life of an engineer.

Some day, after he has settled in the blue grass section, with thoroughbred horses, and a racing car, and also a private still, and perhaps a beautiful wife—we know not what else—we think he will go to the legislature, and live beloved and respected in his native State as he has been at W. & L.

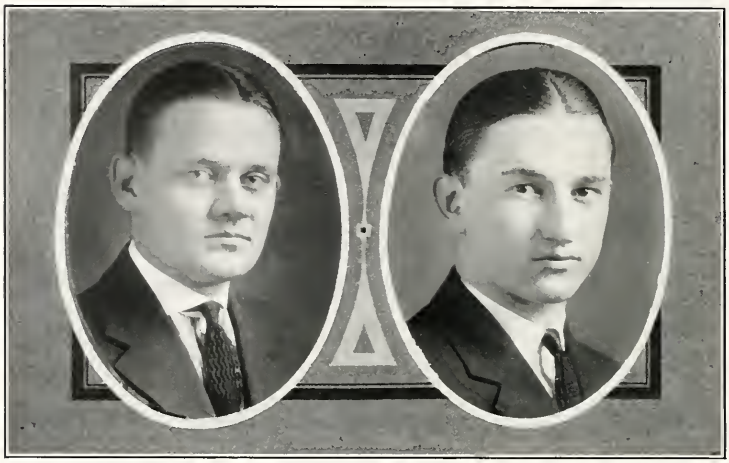
JOHN WESLEY BELL THOMPSON
Waynesboro, Virginia

Σ N

"Dad" entered Washington and Lee last year as a Junior. Turning back to the fall of 1915 we find him at V. P. I. where he stayed two years. The next two years were spent in achievements along another line, and "Dad" returned from the war a captain. Seeking peace and quietude he came to W. & L. where his success has continued. The highest chemistry courses were easy for him, and as for electrical engineering, well, our hats are off to him there. He plans to follow this line and we know that he will su. ceed. The world wants men who "can deliver the goods." and "Dad" can do that.

Furthermore, "Dad" has not neglected the other things that go to make up a well rounded fellow. He is a good baseball player, and something of a ladies' man to boot. We expect him to settle down soon; some think they can guess with whom. Washington and Lee loses and the world gains a good man.

SENIOR COMMERCE



Floyd Damon Compton
Brunswick, Maryland

Σ N; W. F.; Junior Assistant Manager Baseball '20; Assistant Manager Dining Hall '19-'20, Manager Dining Hall '20-'21; Member of W. & L. Orchestra '17-'18

If a gentleman is known by his clothes and bearing, then in "Damon" we have the gentleman par excellence. Quiet, reserved and dignified, he puts up a prepossessing appearance in any company, even at the University of which he is an important factor.

"Damon" came to us in September, 1917, after having received his preparatory training at Brunswick High School and Peabody Conservatory of Music. Although he was a conspicuous violinist in the W & L. Orchestra his freshman year, he has been too busily occupied battling for a B.S. in Commerce since, to display publicly his musical ability.

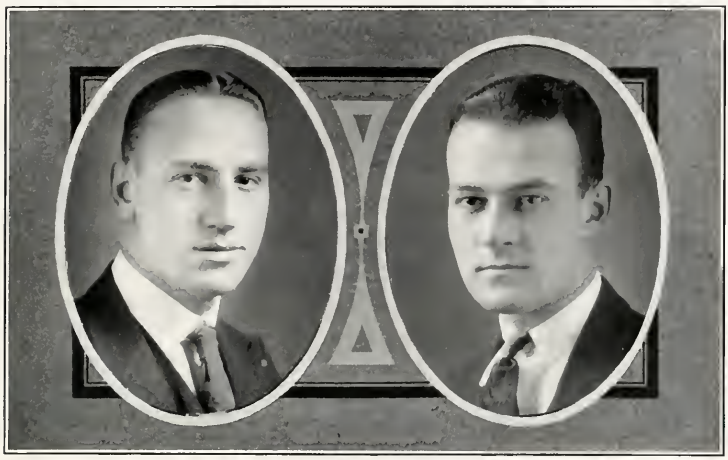
"Damon's" scholastic record is excellent and his attainments at college are not limited to the musical and scholastic, as he has proved himself to be a business man of the highest calibre. By consistent attention to his duties at the University Dining Hall he has succeeded in raising it to a standard creditable to himself and the University.

He is not sure of his life work, but we predict the same success in whatever he may undertake that he has already attained here.

Edward Franklin Garber
Harrisonburg, Virginia

A X P; K B Φ; Combined Musical Club, 1918; Washington Literary Society; Albert Sidney; Finals Executive Committee '20; Assistant Cheer Leader

E. Franklin is another man from the little valley town of Harrisonburg, which he says "has all the advantages of a city and none of its disadvantages." But to this distinction thrust upon him he has added many a solid acquirement. After weathering the Freshman storms he was "soaked" into the S. A. T. C.—but not for long! Soon he was at Camp Lee and in March he returned to the campus, gracing the officer's uniform. Completing the six months' work in four was a small matter to "Frank" and he has been setting a hard pace for the denizens of Newcomb Hall ever since. In Commerce he's a shark; at dancing he's a bear; with the ladies he's a lion. He can do anything—almost, and is adept at selling point (Ask him!). Straightforward and frank, loyal and generous, genial and unassuming—it is with reason that his friends are many. "You can't keep a good man down," it is said. "Frank" should go to the top in his chosen field—business.



Lester Jackson Fox
Chattanooga, Tennessee

B Θ Π; O Δ K; S. & C.; Monogram Club; Varsity Football '17, '18; Varsity Basketball '18; President Sophomore Class '18-'19

"Les" entered Washington and Lee in the fall of 1917, and immediately made himself known on the campus by winning a place on Raftery's "Fighting Generals of 1917." The basketball team also felt the need of his help and he easily became a regular in that sport. Fox was known not only as an athlete but proved his popularity and powers of leadership by his election by an overwhelming majority to the presidency of his class. The next year he was a mainstay of the S. A. T. C. football, and by the end of his Sophomore year his position on the campus was recognized to the extent that he was elected to the "Circle," an honor few attain so early in the college course.

Lester then decided that his life work in the exporting business demanded his presence in South America, so he spent a year at Buenos Aires, holding a position in the Consular Service and attending the National University of Buenos Aires. He returned in time to get his degree with his class, and this year completes a college career, short, but full of honors.

William Andrew Gibbons, Jr.
Roanoke, Virginia

Φ K Σ; Troubadours; Commerce Scholarship 1920; Track Team 1921

Roanoke, ever a place of interest, has now an added significance in the eyes of the world in general and of this campus in particular as the birthplace of William A. Gibbons, Jr. "Bill" soon tired, however, of the Magic City as a place of study and moved his temporary place of abode to Blacksburg, taking advantage of the few advantages and the many disadvantages furnished a matriculant of V. P. I. But after two years of very successful study, he realized that even better things were in store for him, and in the fall of 1919 we find him pleasantly seated in the Commerce School of Washington and Lee. During the short time that he has been here, "Bill" has achieved for himself the reputation of a shark and has been showered with well-deserved scholastic honors, including the permission to have his name inscribed with the chosen few on the Honor Roll.

Besides his attainments as a student, "Bill" has made a host of loyal friends all of whom wish him wonderful success in his chosen profession.

Homer E. Henderson
Sulphur Springs, Texas

Φ K Σ; "13"; W. F.; K B Φ; Football Squad four years; Monogram Football '20

Sans guns, spurs and cowboy hat, the young man you see pictured here is none other than our friend "Heavy" Henderson. "Heavy" hails from the wild and woolly West and still he insists that his home State, Texas, is the garden spot of the world. Be that as it may (room for argument), he came to Washington and Lee in the fall of 1917, and during his four years here on the campus, his ability to make friends and his wonderful personality has proved that we can look for big things from him in the future.

When we think of "Heavy" we think of football, because for the past four years his consistent fighting and determination will long be remembered and we will never forget his performance in the Auburn game in which he played the last quarter with a dislocated shoulder for which, time was never taken out.

We hate to see you go, "Heavy," and may your dream of finding an oil well in your own back yard be realized. If your career in life is as successful as that in college we are assured of your success.

James Franklin Somers
Jacksonville, Florida

Φ K Ψ; S. & C.; Secretary-Treasurer Sophomore Class; President and Leader Mandolin Club '19-'20; Executive Council Troubadours '20; Circulation Manager of Mink '20

James Franklin, more extensively known as "Red" for the usual reason, entered our University in the fall of 1916. Activated by business instinct he leased a corner of the Commerce Library and quietly perused the pamphlets therein until the spring of his Sophomore year when he enlisted for service in the Marine Corps. His next fifteen months were spent overseas with the Second Division in the Army of Occupation stationed at Treves, Germany. Here our Scotch "Apollo" engaged himself expounding geometry "a la Smith" to the frauleins of the hamlet under the title of Army Instructor.

He returned to W. & L. in 1919 and for the past two years has conscientiously devoted himself to his work and a few well known student activities. He is widely known as a most efficient and energetic worker, a sincere and loyal friend. He enters the Graduate School at Harvard next year for more extensive work in Commerce.

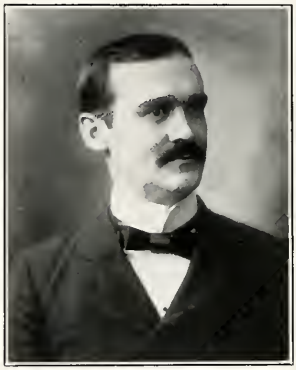
In Memoriam



Edward Lacy Graham

Died March 20, 1921

Alumnus and friend of Washington and Lee, who gave to the institution his best effort of mind and body for nearly half a century, and whose passing from our midst leaves a place which can never be filled and a memory which can never be effaced.

A descendant of the first head of the institution, his life was devoted to its interests and no service in its behalf was too great or too small to receive the benefit of his tireless energy and enthusiasm. His span of life witnessed the growth of Washington and Lee University, and his career has left its impress upon the activities and traditions of our school. For many years he took a large part in guiding the athletic interests of the University and it was his endeavors which resulted in the creation of the Graduate Manager plan, which has recently been installed on the campus.

For the two years just passed he has held the office of President of the Alumni Association and this body has received new life from his active and efficient administration. It was his mind which conceived the idea of erecting our Memorial Gateway and his almost single-handed efforts which achieved a realization of this plan in the beautiful structure which now stands at the entrance to our campus as a permanent record of Washington and Lee's devotion to country and to duty. Let it also stand for us as a symbol of the same love of his country and of his Alma Mater and her sons which was embodied in the life of Edward L. Graham.

The Young Men's Christian Association

THE work of the Young Men's Christian Association at Washington and Lee has continued to be a vital factor in campus life. Bible Study was again emphasized, and was conducted on the Discussion Group Plan, the Normal Training Class being led by Dr. E. F. Shannon. In addition to these classes there were five Student Bible Classes conducted on Sunday morning, one at each of the four local churches, and a Campus Class in the Association Room.

A Promotion Force of Men who signified at the beginning of school that they were willing to take part in Christian work was formed at the first of the year, and met every other Thursday night. These meetings were devoted to a study of some of the methods and reasons for personal Christian work. This Promotion Force was the nucleus of the whole Association Program, the members pledging themselves to support the various religious activities of the Association, including Bible Study and General Religious Meetings. On intervening Thursday nights the General Religious Meetings were held. Among speakers of prominence who addressed these meetings during the year were: Dr. J. R. Howerton, and Dr. F. L. Riley of our own Faculty, Rev. Block of Roanoke, Dr. Winfield Scott Hall, Judge Christian of Lynchburg, "Pat" Withrow of Charleston, W. Va., Union Mission, and others. This article goes to press too early to include an account of special evangelistic meetings held during the first week of March under the leadership of D. Melvin Trotter of Grand Rapids, Michigan.

Details of the Mission Program also have to be omitted from this article on account of early publication requirements. The Association expects to devote the month of April to Missionary emphasis both in the Religious Meetings and in the Voluntary Study Groups.

The Social Service Program has consisted largely of work with the boys of the Lexington High School. In addition to this work, conducted under the leadership of W. B. Patterson, about ten students are teaching classes and rendering other religious service in the community, other than in connection with the Church Young Peoples' Societies, where a large number of students are active.

HONOR SYSTEM CANTEEN

The Social Program of the Association has been very active. Mr. E. W. Cummings, chairman of this phase of the work, withdrew from college in November, but his work continued. Special social features were given to the new men at the beginning of the year, at Thanksgiving, and during the Christmas Holidays. Mr. J. W. Dupree assumed the duties of chairman of the Social Committee during the Winter term. During this term, Sunday Afternoon socials and musicales helped to pass the lonesome Sunday afternoons. Attractive music, light refreshments, and good-fellowship regularly composed the program. The three excellent musical programs of the Lyceum Course were very enthusiastically received by the students who attended them. These entertainments were given as a membership privilege free to all students and members of the Faculty of the University. Admission tickets were sold to the people of Lexington to help defray the cost of the course.

No feature of the General Program of the year has been without the direct or indirect influence of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Y. M. C. A., organized last fall among the ladies of the faculty and the town. This organization has constantly co-operated with the Y. M. C. A. to make its work easier and more attractive. Through its influence more students, especially new students, have been socially received into the attractive homes of Lexington than ever before. Every student who has had to go to the hospital has received their warm-hearted and cordial attentions. Their co-operation has added countless attractions to the many features of the work, and it is sincerely hoped that they will continue their welcome ministrations.

The 1920-'21 budget of the Y. M. C. A. totalled over $5,000. The students and Faculty contributed approximately one third of this through voluntary contributions. The Board of Trustees gave generous recognition to the work by an appropriation of $2,000 toward the salary of the General Secretary.

Probably no feature of the Y. M. C. A. work was more appreciated by the students than the football coaching by the General Secretary. With the consent of the advisory board and student officers of the Association, the Secretary devoted every afternoon during the football season to assisting Coach Raftery develop the successful 1920 team of the Fighting Generals. The Secretary, Ted Shultz, played on the Washington and Lee football teams of 1912, '13, '14, and '15, and brought to his coaching not only football experience but also a love of the school and a devotion to clean athletics which made his services invaluable. His work was a labor of love, and his service a contribution from the Y. M. C. A. to the Athletic Association, as it was performed gratis.

The Recreation Room of the Association, where there is a piano and a victrola, and also checkers, chess, and current magazines, still proves to be one of the most popular spots on the campus. It is hard to realize what our campus was without such a social center. One corner of the Recreation Room is given over to the much-famed Honor System Canteen of Washington and Lee, which continues operation under the supervision of the Association.

May the Young Men's Christian Association, organized on our campus in 1867 with the inspiring co-operation of Robert E. Lee himself, continue to exert its wholesome influence as a moral, religious, and social factor in our University life.

THE TROUBADOURS

An Historical Sketch

IN the fall quarter of 1919, three men keenly interested in college dramatics founded "The Troubadours." Through the efforts of these men—Dr. J. L. Howe, Ted Schultz, and V. E. Kemp—a constitution was drawn up, officers elected, and the organization started on its way.

Preparations were at once made for the presentation of a premier performance, and in two months after its founding, "The Troubadours" made its debut with a semi-vaudeville entertainment which was well received.

Not satisfied with this initial effort, Mr. John A. Graham, the Faculty Advisor, furnished an excellent score as the basis of a musical comedy. And around this music, Mr. J. L. Peck, a member of "The Troubadours," wrote the book "Don't Let This Happen To You," presented in Lexington during the winter term and taken on the road for a successful tour of several Virginia cities.

With the success of its first year's existence as a spur to advancement "The Troubadours" started the 1920-'21 session with high ambitions.

In November, an opening variety show was offered in Lexington and the audience responded with much applause and many dollars.

From November until February, the entire organization concentrated on the production of a second musical comedy. Again the music was written by Mr. John A. Graham; this time the book was written by Mr. Stuart Moore, a member of "The Troubadours." The production was entitled, "Let's Dance," and was presented to a Lexington audience during the winter dances. It was a tremendous success and when taken on the road was as well received in the several Virginia and West Virginia cities as it had been in Lexington.

"The Troubadours" is a success and has been recognized as an important University organization. At first there was no higher aim than to amuse the University public. Outside of a love scene or two, the first show was not hampered by a plot; but, as success grew, a broader raison d'etre was demanded of "The Troubadours". So now to evoke any enthusiasm a production must not only be clever but also logical, original, edifying, beautiful, well staged, expensive, and above reproach. In the future, "The Troubadours" will not be content with musical comedy but will endeavor to give its friends an opportunity to enjoy the serious drama.

The First Annual Troubadour Show

The first annual production of "The Troubadours" was the original musical comedy, "Don't Let This Happen To You". The book by J. L. Peck, '22 and music by John Graham, '14, enacted and sung by a competent cast, proved a success wherever it went.

The plot concerning two college "Romeo's" who, on a wager, go disguised as deaf and dumb mutes to Palm Beach, where they are to entice, without voice, two "fair ones" within a limited space of time. After a series of complications, and when all seemed lost, the unexpected happened and "all's well that ends well." As funmaker or pathfinder, the play did much to place "The Troubadours" in their present secure condition.

"Let's Dance"

With an unusual cast, including the famous "Beauty Chorus," clever lines, striking costumes, and an abundance of music of the highest order, the second annual Troubadour show registered the high-water mark of theatrical attainment at Washington and Lee. The book, by Stuart Moore, depicted the famous Fancy Dress Ball and the action concerned itself with the tangle in three love affairs brought about by an absent-minded professor. The musical numbers by John A. Graham won especial comment as being equal to the best found in any musical comedy.

"Let's Dance" met with enviable treatment at the hands of its audiences and has been pronounced one of the best college shows ever produced in the South. In addition to the producers, especial credit is due to Mary Arlington of the Century Theatre, N. Y., J. H. Campbell, Jr., and E. L. Graham, Jr. for their timely aid and suggestions.

Miss Annie R. White

An Appreciation

Perhaps the most pleasing and impressive acquaintance one makes at Washington and Lee is with the smiling and truly lovable Miss Annie White. For years she has been "Miss Annie" to us all, always kind, always loving, always true, and always loved by those who know the sincerity and nobleness in this little woman's heart.

Miss Annie White has, beyond a doubt, done more toward making this institution the center of college social life than anyone, either in or out of the faculty. Her "Fancy Dress Ball" sets the social pace for the Southern colleges, and up to this writing the pace has never been passed, nor has it been equalled. However, Miss Annie does not limit herself to society, for she has a library that Mr. Carnegie, its donor for whom it is named, would be proud to walk into and claim at any time. With its countless books, many of priceless value, it is the object of esteem and the habitation of many students.

In a word, Miss Annie is all that could be asked of any mortal. To her we never bid a sharp goodbye, but always a soft, sad Aloha —Until We Meet Again.—J. L. P.

The Football Season

FACING what was undeniably the most formidable eight-game schedule in recent years, the 1920 Football season was ushered in somewhat inauspiciously at Washington and Lee on September 15th. Sixty-five would-be wearers of the Blue and White reported to Head Coach Bill Raftery on Wilson Field for the first preliminary workout preparatory to the initial contest of the season with Davidson on October 2nd.

The general consensus of opinion on the campus, from the viewpoint of the coaches and from the student body as well, seemed to be that the Generals could scarcely hope for the forthcoming season to compare favorably with the one which had preceded it, and justly so. The squad itself, though not seriously crippled, was unmistakably handicapped by the loss of several of last season's veterans who had taken outstanding parts in the 1919 victories. Among these were Captain Turner Bethel at tackle, "Big Ed" Bailey at guard, and Oliver Daves, end, each of whom was seemingly invaluable.

The order of games on the schedule, however, gave the followers and supporters of the team more worry than the loss of last season's stellar performers, for Princeton, V. P. I., West Virginia, Auburn, and Georgetown were to be played practically consecutively. A glance at this array of opponents warranted no little worry on the part of all, from the coach down to the newest candidate to don the moleskins. There was no gainsaying the fact that the 1920 season would indeed prove the mettle of the Fighting Generals.

Quite in keeping with his previous performances and refusing to be daunted by the ominous outlook, Head Coach W. C. Raftery, more familiarly known on the campus as "Bill," ably abetted by Assistant Head Coach Ted Shultz, set about the apparently enormous task of whipping into shape an eleven-man machine which would be able to give an entirely satisfactory account of itself against its opponents.

It was not long before even the more pessimistic ones who were attending the preliminary drills and scrimmages on Wilson Field each afternoon, were viewing the future with more confidence. Captain Lindsay Moore, Barrow, Sanford, Mattox, Henderson and Patterson, all of whom had played in the line last year, and Silverstein, Raines, McDonald, and Cogbill, last season's backfield veterans, formed the nucleus around which Coach Raftery was rapidly building a fighting machine. As to the new material, the backfield seemed to be taken care of in the personages of Tucker (all-West Virginia state prep back), Cameron, (Culver Military Academy's fullback), and Frew, while Leake of Memphis University school, Dockery, and Thomas were all showing up well as probable line contenders. Even at this early stage of the season, there were others who gave excellent promise of becoming valuable additions to the squad.

There seemed to be an abundance of material from which to select both a regular backfield and a line, but as before, the absence of an effective punter was especially noticeable. This absence was perhaps the one seriously weak spot in the Generals' make-up for the remainder of the season.

On October 2nd, Davidson came to Lexington with a 25 to 0 defeat at the hands of North Carolina hanging around their necks, and a fairly easy game had been anticipated by Coach Raftery as a starter for the Generals. By this time, the Generals' line-up had at least been tentatively decided. Paget was in the pivotal position at the center of the line, Patterson and Barrow were at the guard stations, Captain Moore and Sanford were at left and right tackle respectively, while Herndon and McDonald cavorted on the right and left wings. Bullet Joe Silverstein was at quarter and calling signals, Raines was at right half, Tucker (the only new man to start the game) was at left half, while Monk Mattox was in the fullback position. The game, though, slow throughout, proved to be stiffer than the Generals had contracted for, the final whistle revealing but a scant 6 points to Davidson's 0. Although the Blue and White outplayed the Davidsonians in every department, making eleven first downs to their two, and twice having the ball on their 5-yard line, they seemed to lack the punch to carry it over at the crucial moment. Silverstein's unfailing toe was responsible for our total points, he dropping two field goals over in the course of the afternoon, one in the second quarter from the 20-yard line and the other in the third quarter from the 25-yard line. The entire team showed up well in the opening contest, the line performing exceptionally and giving evidence of mid-season form, turning back the assaults of the Wildcats time and again for no gain. The backfield showed that it would primarily be one whose outstanding feature during the year would be speed, more speed and still more speed. Tucker, who played his first game of college football, showed that he would make a fit running-mate for the speedy Mattox, while Bullet Joe and Raines penetrated at will for substantial gains. Several substitutions were made in the final quarter, Henderson showing up well at center and Leake relieving Herndon handily at end. Undoubtedly, the Generals had an organization which needed only to become used to one another's style of play in a real contest to become seasoned.

The second game of the season with Wake Forest on October 10th, resulted in a decisive 27 to 0 victory for the Generals. From the first toot of the referee's tin until the last second of the fourth quarter, everything went in the Generals' direction and to their liking. The backfield appeared slightly changed. Raines and Cogbill, having suffered minor injuries were both held in reserve for the Princeton game on the following Saturday. Cameron took Raines' place at right half, playing his first college game, and was responsible for one touchdown, showing heady work whenever called upon. Mattox was shifted to left half, Tucker to quarter, and Silverstein to full, although he still called signals. The line worked magnificently and had gaping holes on every play for the backs to slide through for long gains. The Generals put over twenty-four first downs to Wake Forest's none, and outplayed the visitors in every department of the game. The open field running of Tucker, the bullet-like forward passes of Monk Mattox for 10, 15, and 25 yards at a clip, and the line-plunging of Silverstein featured the afternoon's victory. Tucker especially distinguished himself as a veritable find by his all-around brilliant play. With but ten seconds to go, he snatched a long 25-yard pass from Mattox just on the goal line and carried it over for the Generals' final tally; it proving to be the hair-raiser of the evening's programme.

On Saturday, October 16th, the Generals met their first reverse of the season when Princeton by an irresistible attack defeated the Blue and White by a score of 34 to 0. Although the score was decisive, it does not offer a fair basis of comparison for the two teams, since the game, early in the first quarter, was marred by one of those streaks of ill-fortune which are disastrous to a team which is playing on a foreign field and against odds. On the first play of the game, Silverstein tore off 6 yards through tackle, followed by Mattox, who reeled off 3 more, which was followed in turn by the jinx in the form of an unavoidable fumble straight into the outstretched arms of Garrity, who, on his feet and protected by Gilroy as interference, dashed 45 yards for a touchdown and the first score of the game. This happening, unfortunate as it was, seemed to upset the Generals' play completely. Admittedly, Princeton, during the entire game, was not more than two touchdowns better than the Generals', but the fact that their substitutes were far more numerous than Washington and Lee's, and fresh to the bargain, offered too much of an obstacle for the Blue and White to overcome. For the Generals, the playing of Captain Lindsay Moore was the feature of the game, his general alertness making him the central figure in every play. His all-around playing compared favorably with any one of Princeton's linemen. Fats Barrow also gave a good account of himself as did Tucker and Cogbill, though neither of the latter two played their usual flashy game. The sportsmanship of Princeton was of the highest order, and the generous treatment received at their hands by the Generals will long be remembered. Towards the close of the second half, both Raines and McDonald were injured and had to be removed from the game.

The Generals played their last home game of the season against Roanoke College on Saturday, October 23rd, defeating the visitors 49 to 7 in an easy fashion. At no time during the contest were the Generals called upon to put forth their best efforts, and in a series of eight plays, three minutes after the opening whistle had blown, the pigskin went over the line for the initial marker.

Playing in Lynchburg before a crowd of 5,000 persons, the Generals romped on, over, and around their ancient rivals from Virginia Polytechnic Institute on October 30th, to the refrain of 13 to 0, in the most bitterly contested game of the season. It was the eighteenth game that had been played between the two institutions, and as in former years, elaborate preparations were begun several weeks in advance for a fitting invasion into the enemy's territory. A special train, carrying practically the entire student body, left Lexington in the early morning of the all-important day (the band accompanying), for the scene of the contest. By the time for the whistle to blow, the field in Lynchburg was packed with the supporters of the two teams, and promptly at three o'clock the fireworks began. The Generals won, fairly and squarely, because they were better than V. P. I., which is, perhaps the simplest way of telling the story. The variety of the Blue and White attack, the heady generalship displayed by Cogbill at quarter, and the all-around play of each individual on the team triumphed over the cadets in a gloriously earned victory. During the first quarter, it was anybody's game. There was not a single first down made by either team, which gives some idea of their relative strength. In the second quarter, however, V. P. I. began things with a rush by working the ball from midfield to the Generals' 20-yard line. A drop kick failed, and the Generals had the ball on downs. From this point on, there have been few teams representing W. and L. which have given evidence of such offensive tactics, for the sturdy Generals began an 80-yard march down the field which ended only when Tucker circled left end for 15 yards on a criss-cross and the first score for Washington and Lee. The second tally came in the third quarter after Arbogast had recovered a punt which had been blocked on Tech's 20-yard line. On the first down, Mattox received the pass, darted 5 yards to the right, and suddenly wheeling, shot one of his arrow-like passes straight into the waiting arms of Tucker, who crossed the line.

The team as a whole worked superbly. In the backfield, Tucker was responsible for both touchdowns and was on the receiving end of three of Mattox's long passes. Cogbill skipped through the line and cantered the ends for numerous gains, while as usual, Silverstein was there with the old pile-driver's line buck when needed. In the line, Captain Moore played his customary stellar game, while Arbogast, for the first time at varsity end, was in everything from the first whistle on, gathering in one 12-yard pass from Mattox and blocking the punt which was responsible for the second score.

For the first time since 1915, that memorable year when Coach Sol Metzger called his West Virginia Mountaineers off the field on account of alleged unfairness on the part of an official, the Generals and West Virginia met at Charleston on November 6th, in the seventh and deciding game of their intercollegiate series, West Virginia winning by the close score of 14 to 10. It was the first time that West Virginia had registered a win over Washington and Lee since 1902, and their mainstay in this victory was the spectacular playing of Beck, their star halfback, without whom there might have been a different story. Neither team scored in the first quarter but West Virgin a was the first to cross the line in the second period, Harrick falling on a blocked punt near the Generals' 15-yard line for the score. With characteristic fight, however, the Generals came back and with the assistance of the Mattox to Bemis 35-yard pass, Silverstein plunged over the Mountaineers' line and the score was even. In the third quarter, Silverstein sailed a beautiful drop kick over the bars from the 30-yard line and the score stood 10 to 7. With but five minutes to play, West Virginia opened up a terrific assault, and with Beck doing the majority of the work, they finally managed to cross our line for the final and deciding touchdown. It was a great game, but the breaks were against the Generals. Tucker, Silverstein, Moore, and Sanford, as well as the others, played a remarkable fighting, smashing game and had it not been for the one lucky fumble recovery of Harrick, the Generals would have annexed another victory to their belts.

With two thirds of the regulars out of the game on account of injuries received in the West Virginia game, with the strain of a long, tiresome trip behind them and with the most adverse of weather conditions, Auburn administered the worst defeat that a Washington and Lee team has ever experienced, on Saturday, November 13th, when they swamped the lighter Blue and White to the tune of 77 to 0. The Generals were hopelessly outweighed, and they had played the hardest game of the season against West Virginia on the previous Saturday, putting everything they had into striving for a victory over the Mountaineers. Captain Moore was out of the game with an injured knee, Raines and McDonald were each on the sick list, and Cogbill was also injured, making an irreparable loss. The contest was easy for the Auburnites, as the score indicates, although no little allowance should be made for the general condition of the Washington and Lee squad.

Establishing a fitting close to a glorious season, Washington and Lee defeated their ancient and much-touted foes, Georgetown University, at Washington on November 20th, 16 to 7, in one of the cleanest-cut victories of the season. The team journeyed to the capital with the one idea of revenge for last year's defeat uppermost in their minds—and they obtained it. The shifty, flashing antics of the four speed-merchants in the Generals' backfield, coupled with the stone-wall defense presented by the line, were bulwarks of strength against which the Georgetown eleven was powerless. Again, the consistent and successful use of the aerial attack was mainly responsible for the Generals' victory. Only a few minutes after the game had begun, a 30-yard toss, Mattox to Leake, accounted for the first score. The second marker was made after Bemis had carried another pass to the 5-yard whitewash, Tucker taking it over on still another toss from the unerring arms of Mattox. Silverstein's drop kick from the 35-yard line put the Generals in the lead in the second quarter. Captain Moore played one of the greatest games of his career in this contest. He was first down the field under several punts, and time and again dropped Flavin, Georgetown's star performer, in his tracks. Tucker ran back punts well, while Raines, back in the game after recovering from his injuries, played his usual dependable game. The line proved to be absolutely impregnable against Georgetown's smashes. In fact, the only department of the game in which the Blue and White did not outplay Georgetown was in the punting direction.

On the whole, the career of the 1920 Generals was essentially a checkered one. At times the eleven-man organization which Coach Raftery and his assistants had built up was apparently unbeatable, as in the West Virginia, Georgetown and V. P. I. games, while again their playing was of the loosest sort, as in the Princeton and Auburn contests, handicapped, no doubt, by injuries and the strain and tire of long and telling trips. Too much cannot be said, however, of the magnificent spirit which pervaded the work of the coaches, the team itself, and the substitutes, all and each of whom endeavored always to play a square game and to bring honor to Washington and Lee.

Resumé Season 1921

THOUGH the defeat administered the Blue and White by their traditional rivals, West Virginia, at Morgantown in the final game of the year kept the resumé of the season from being written as "closed in a blaze of glory," Washington and Lee's basketball record for 1921 was particularly successful in more ways than one. The decisive scores of the games which went down as victories for the Generals, the comparative closeness of the scores of the games which were lost, and finally the all-around play of the quintet when in action either at home or abroad attests unmistakably to the fact that Coach Raftery, again, as in football, produced under adverse circumstances an organization of superior calibre, fit in every respect to represent Washington and Lee on the court.

The loss of three letter men from last year's squad did not lend any impetus to the selection of a five this year. Captain-elect McCain, "Buck" Bryant and Ray Moore were a trio of mainstays whose absence was conspicuously noticeable on the floor shortly before the Christmas holidays when the first call for practice was issued by Coach Raftery. Preliminary work was indulged in from the close of the football season until the examinations began just before Christmas. Practice was again started immediately following the return from the holidays. Thomas, Harris, McDonald, Snively and Stewart were those on last year's squad who reported for duty, while several among the new men gave excellent promise of becoming contenders for positions.

The 1921 season was ushered in officially as well as successfully with the game against Roanoke College, which resulted in a decisive 43-23 victory for the Generals. The University of South Carolina came next on the schedule and they were subjected to even rougher treatment at the hands of Raftery's chosen five, the final score reading 33 to 11, with the Generals on the long end.

Richmond University furnished the opposition for the third game on the schedule and their defeat was accomplished only after a stiff contest from the start. The final score stood 21 to 16, but the Generals were forced to extend themselves to register a win.

The Generals displayed their first real flash of form and consistent teamwork in the following game against the Citadel, defeating the South Carolinians 29 to 15 in a spectacular victory. Hines being on the sick list, McDonald was shifted to fill his position at center, while Stephens, who had returned to college, was placed at guard, the resultant combination working superbly. The crowd which filled the gymnasium to capacity was brought to its feet time and again by the phenomenal passing and dribbling of Stephens and the general play of the Generals. The game was never in doubt, and Harris and Thomas anticipated the passing of

Stephens to a nicety which accounted for a good number of baskets.

The first trip of the year for the team came on January 29th, when V. P. I. took the measure of the Generals by a 25 to 9 score at Roanoke. The inability of the Blue and White to locate the baskets and the weakness of their foul shooting was in the main responsible for the loss of the contest. Hines' absence was keenly felt in regards to the foul shooting end of the fracas, though Stephens and Stewart showed up well for Washington and Lee.

Bringing to Lexington by far the best team which the Generals had met, the University of North Carolina downed the Blue and White by the close score of 29 to 25 after a hard-fought contest.

Although Davidson came up from the Tar Heel State determined to carry away a similar scalping at the expense of the Generals, they went under to the refrain of 31 to 28, with the home quintet playing a steady brand of ball.

On the Maryland invasion, Johns Hopkins fell victim to the Generals' onslaught and only succeeded in rolling up 23 points against the Virginians 29.

St. Johns, also hailing from the wilds of Maryland, journeyed to Washington and Lee next and forthwith journeyed back again with the sting of a 25 to 16 defeat going along with them.

Trinity, carrying with them the distinction of having been undefeated all season, and with glowing press reports preceding them, came next and they were overwhelmingly defeated 29 to 11.

Wake Forest offered but little opposition for the Generals. The game was rough from the start and with the score 25 to 14 against them, their Coach called his men from the floor. The entire second team was used by Coach Raftery in the second half and displayed a superior knowledge of the game from all angles.

The final two games of the year resulted in defeats for the Generals. V. P. I. was met at Lynchburg in the second game of the year, and although the Blue and White left the floor at the close of the first period several points to the good, the Cadets came back with a strong offense and an uncanny ability to reach the hoops, two baskets in quick succession by Parrish clinching the contest for them.

West Virginia was successful in wrestling the final game of the season from the Generals at Morgantown by a score of 32 to 21.

The Varsity for 1921 was composed of Hines, who became ill at the start of the season and was incapacitated for a majority of the remainder; Bill Stephens, acting captain and sensational guard; McDonald, the rangy Arkansan, who starred in many of the games at his new position at center; Thomas, the plucky little forward whose aim was always accurate; Harris, Thomas' capable running mate and a wizard at making difficult field goals, and Arbogast, the burly guard, who was a veritable mountain of defense, as well as a goal shooter of no mean ability. Stewart, Hall, Snively, Cameron, Yancey, Minnich and W. M. Stevens were members of a highly efficient squad ever ready to step in and capably substitute for any of the first string five.

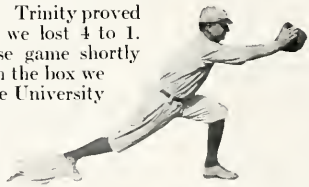
Baseball Season

STARTING off the Schedule with a 5 to 4 victory over Amherst the Generals carried on a season, which, counting the numbers of games lost and won could not be considered as entirely successful. The main weakness of the Blue and White men lay in the pitching staff. We had pitchers of ability but three of the four had their arms go back on them and the season for them was not as bright as in the past. The loss of Jimmy Mattox shortly before the Northern trip upset the infield and although Monk filled Jimmie's shoes in a creditable manner, his absence was felt keenly.

With Ty Cobb hitting the pill for three triple baggers and Bill McCallum pitching superb ball the Generals won over Amherst in the opening battle by a one run margin. The next game with William and Mary resulted in a walk-away, the final score being 16–2. Trinity proved to be a stumbling block and we lost 4 to 1. Georgia won 10 to 7 in a loose game shortly afterwards. With McCallum in the box we won from Roanoke 3 to 2. The University of North Carolina next went down at the hands of the Generals 9 to 4. V. P. I. upset the dope by winning 8 to 2 at Blacksburg. The day following McCallum pitched another victory over Catholic University. Sammy Raines' hitting along with Cobb and Collins accounted for our runs. The Navy won the next contest only after the Generals had given them a tight battle. The game with Georgetown was the worst of the season, the Washington team winning by an unusually big score. New York College was beaten the next day after the Army game was called off on account of rain, by a lopsided score. Returning to Lexington we won from Lincoln Memorial 14 to 13 in one of the oddest games of the year. The season ended with a decisive victory over V. P. I. 15 to 2. McCallum, winning all of his games easily was the best of the pitching staff and great things are expected of him this year. The hitting of Pat Collins, captain-elect for this year, lead the team and his failure to return was a great disappointment to the followers of the team. However the prospects are bright for a good season.



Baseball Prospects, 1921

THE 1921 CALYX goes in the hands of the printers long before the final outcome of the Baseball season can be ascertained. However this much is certain—Captain Pete Hisle will be leader of as clever a bunch of ball-players as ever donned the Generals' uniform. Of the old men, Monk Mattox, is back at the receiving end, with Johnnie Walker and Bill McCallum ready and anxious to send them over. Ty Cobb, Pete Hisle, Curly Burke, Sammy Raines, and Matt Handerson, all members of former teams—are the remainder of the monogram men ready for the announcement of the first "Batteries for today's game."

Pat Patterson has arranged a schedule that would tax any team, and among the future victims (?) we notice V. P. I., Georgia Tech, Penn State and Vanderbilt holding prominent places.

Much promising material is out for the team and with Bill Raftery coaching again, the season's success is assured. The remainder of the program is up to the backing of the student body and it is a safe bet that no better could be found in the country. All said it appears to be a hard but successful spring season for the Generals' baseball outfit.

Resumé Spring 1920

ALTHOUGH a resumé of the track season for 1920-1921 must of necessity be limited in its scope due to the fact that the CALYX goes to press before any of the spring meets are held, the showing already made this year by Washington and Lee's wearers of the spiked shoes permits mention of the achievements accomplished to date by the Blue and White squad.

Last spring, the team showed up to most excellent advantage in the South Atlantic Intercollegiate outdoor meet which was held at V. P. I. in May. Though Virginia was successful in taking first honors in the number of points scored, Washington and Lee finished a close second, scoring a goodly number more points than her nearest rival, V. P. I. The team showed careful and consistent training and in each event which the Blue and White entered, they made a creditable impression.

In the meet held here with Penn State, Washington and Lee succeeded in capturing all of the dashes but lost out in the distance runs. Thompson in the 100-yard dash, Thomas in the 220 and Robbins in the 440 all breasted the tape ahead of their opponents, but Shields, bearing the Penn State Colors, showed his heels to the field in the mile and two-mile runs. The final result gave Penn a 10-point lead over the Blue and White.

Practice for positions on the Cross-country team began a week after the opening of school in September this year with 20 candidates reporting daily on Wilson Field for jogs across the surrounding countryside. With Coach Forest Fletcher to direct the men and lend them the benefits of his advice and coaching, the team soon began to whip into shape. Before holding any meet, against outside opposition, the existing record for the six-mile course here was broken by Captain Garard, as well as by Stevens in practice, each negotiating the distance well under all previous time.

A triple meet with Princeton and Maryland State was cancelled owing to the last-minute inability of either of the two to come here for the contest.

On November 15, the South Atlantic Intercollegiate Cross-country run was held at Charlottesville over a six-mile course with teams from the University of Virginia, Johns Hopkins, Maryland State and Washington and Lee competing. Due to the sterling work of Captain Garard, who finished second in the run, as well as Caldwell and Smith, who finished fourth and fifth in the run respectively, the Blue and White team was awarded second place in the meet, Virginia taking first place on her points. Virginia's winning time was 34:48; while Garard, who came in second, made the six miles in 34:57. Running under Washington and Lee's colors in the meet were, Captain Garard, Burch, Caldwell, Smith, Pass, Partlow, Stevens and Swope. The team's showing was not what it should have been inasmuch as the winning time for the race had been bettered by Garard here in practice previously. Before this run, the team had trained to a fine point in anticipation of two meets which were to have been held here but which failed to materialize. Training was then slacked off for a period of two weeks, and taken up again not long before the meet at Virginia, which did not allow the team to be in the best of condition as it had been all fall. The prospects for a Cross-country team for next year are exceptionally bright, with Stevens and Childs both returning to college.

Resumé Tennis

THE 1920 Tennis season was a great success and remarkable for the fact that Washington and Lee, entering only upon its second year in this sport, put forth a team which not only defeated every opponent, but lost only two individual matches in the four contests played. Every team met was defeated by such decisive scores as to leave no doubt of our superiority over any team in this section. The team composed of Burch, Cohn, Snively, Glickstein, Jones, and Goldberg, and coached by Professor Williams, could have upheld its own in either doubles or singles against any Southern team. The men individually showed consistent form throughout the season, and too much credit cannot be given Mr. Williams for their success.

The opening game with George Washington University was cancelled on account of rain. Johns Hopkins was met and defeated 5–1. Trinity, a team which had defeated several other colleges in its vicinity was the next victim by a similar score. The team then journeyed to Lynchburg, winning against Virginia Christian College with ease, 6–0. The match with V. P. I. the following day at Blacksburg was expected to be a severe test, as Graham, the V. P. I. captain, was the Virginia inter-collegiate champion. However, the W. and L. racqueteers were not forced to extend themselves, capturing the two matches played, the others being cancelled on account of rain.

With three letter men, Burch, Snively, and Cohn returning, and much promising new material, this year's team should have an even more successful season. With expected financial aid from the Athletic Council, trips are being planned to Washington, Baltimore, and other cities, and the team will have a chance to show its ability against very strong opponents.

The Annual Albert Sidney-Harry Lee Regatta

ALTHOUGH there was only one decision in the annual races during finals, the Harry Lee Club won the honors of the day by taking the second race with a good margin after the first crews had called their race a draw on account of a misunderstanding at the finish. Both races were fought hard throughout the course and ended with good spurts.

The first race was beautiful to watch as the shells glided along side by side and the strong and powerful unison of the men made them shoot swiftly down the old North River. Albert Sidney took the lead at the start and held it until the last turn when the crews crowded and the judges agreed that no decision could be given.

Much enthusiasm was shown in the match between the two second crews, which pulled down the river in mighty quick time. In this race the Harry Lees got away with a good start and held the lead to the finish, winning over their rivals by a good three lengths.

Admirers of the crews are looking forward with great expectations for the race this year which will decide the winner of last year's draw. Both crews are well represented with old men and the contest should be one of the best ever staged on the North River.

FIRST call for Varsity Swimming practice was made immediately following the return from the Christmas holidays by Coach Forrest Fletcher, approximately twenty candidates for positions on the team presenting themselves for daily workouts in the tank in Doremus Gymnasium. From the first, it was evident that there was no actual scarcity of promising material, although several of the men had not had previous experience in actual competition.

From last year's team Captain Steer, Rushton, Thornburg and Greiner all returned and reported for practice, while among the new contenders for berths on the team who showed up to advantage in the early part of the season were Hartridge, Jenkins, Smith, Mereke, Hock, Benton, and Wiggins. With Coach Fletcher and Manager Dan Blain in charge each afternoon, practice sessions were held daily in the pool in preparation for the first meet of the year, which was with George Washington University on Saturday night, March 6th.

The visitors brought to Washington and Lee a team which was a little beyond the expectations of the majority who filled the gallery of the tank in the anticipation of witnessing the Blue and White register to win. George Washington was successful in capturing a substantial number of the events on the card, W. and L. winning the plunge, Rushton breaking the existing record by negotiating 57 feet, and the fancy diving, in which Smith was easily the winner over his opponent.

A return meet has been scheduled to be held at Washington on March 20th, the early date at which the CALYX goes to press preventing an account of the outcome.

ENTERING upon our first year of Intercollegiate Wrestling, the Blue and White team, coached by Ernest Brett, has shown up exceptionally well and is certainly deserving of loud praise for its record. The first call for candidates resulted in the wrestling room being swamped with men eager for tryouts. Coach Brett worked with the squad through the fall term and then cut the bunch down by elimination matches until he had a strong team formed and ready to meet any other club in this section.

The first match with V. P. I. at Blacksburg resulted in a decisive victory for the Generals' mat men by a 18 to 11 score. Washington and Lee won three events on falls and one on decision while the Tech won one event on falls and two on decisions. McGill threw his man in one minute and fifteen seconds, this bout being the shortest of the meet. Cothran won by decision and Sutherland threw his opponent, who outweighed him by 20 pounds in a short match. McGraw, as Tech's best man was selected to go against Potts in the unlimited class. Potts threw him in two minutes and fifty seconds.

Following the victory over V. P. I. the team met defeat at the hands of the West Point mat men, the latter winning by 19 to 6 count. Sutherland won his bout on a decision and Potts again won over his man. Greater experience at the game was attributed to the defeat although the team put up a tough exhibition of wrestling and stayed with the victors until forced to take the count.

The remaining meet with Davidson is expected to be an easy victory for the Generals' squad.

Coach Brett is to be congratulated on the excellent showing made by his team. He has worked hard with the men and credit for the record made should be given him. With the return of the entire team to school next year the Mat Team should be unusually strong and capable to meet any teams in the east.

A Relic of the Past

GEORGE y^e Seconde by y^e Grace of God, of Great Britain, France and Ireland, King Defender of y^e Faith, etc.

TO ALL TO WHOM theſe preſents ſhall come greeting

WHEREAS, our faithful and well-beloved Subjects, Reverend William Graham, Andrew Moore, William Alexander, Samuel Lyle and Archibald Stewart, Gentlemen, have been humble ſuitors unto US, that WE would vouchſafe unto them OUR Licenſe to erect and eſtabliſh a Seminarie of Learning in that part of OUR Colony of Virginia commonly called Auguſta, that y^e youth may be educated in good letters and manners and that y^e Chriſtian faith may be propagated amongſt y^e Weſtern Indians.

AND, to that end, WE greatly commending and graciouſly accepting of their Deſires for y^e furtherance of ſo noble a work and being deſirous that there ſhould be, forever after, ſome ſuche college or place of univerſal learning, of OUR ſpecial grace, and mere motion, HAVE GRANTED, for us, OUR heirs and ſucceſſors as much as in us lies, that y^e humble ſuitors our ſubjects, have power to erect, found and eſtabliſh ſuche a certain place of univerſal ſtudy under y^e following conditions.

I. Provided. Y^e ſhall not proponde learning or ſanction acts which ſhall be derogatorie to y^e peaceful ideas of Religion or humble living ſuche as we would commend unto our loving ſubjects, y^e ſtudents, who ſhall at all tymes comport themſelves with becoming dignity.

II. Provided. Y^e ſhall debarre all rough and violent exerciſes, as y^e Foot-ball meetes, which lame rather than make able y^e uſers thereof; as for y^e tumbling tricks, they only ſerve for y^e commedians and y^e morality players to win their bread with.

III. Provided. Y^e ſhall hinder y^e ſtudents from indulging in y^e guiltie arte of dancyinge for it is a legacy from y^e dark days of y^e Papacy and an invention of y^e Evil One.

IV. Provided. Y^e diſcourage y^e ſtudents from competing with y^e cue and wielding y^e ſtick at Golphe, for they are uſeleſs paſtimes which may bring on pernicious idleneſs, y^e very Mother of all Vice and fit only for y^e hoary headed ſages to haggle and diſpute over in y^e gloaming.

V. Provided. When it is foule and ſtormy weather, y^e ſtudents may be lawfully ſanctioned to play at y^e cards, dice, tables and ſuche like games of hazarde, which are ſubject to knaviſh cogging; but as for y^e game of cheſſe, we deem it too overwiſe and philoſophicke a Follie unleſs when indulged in by y^e anciente Dames between y^e tymes for ſpinninge at y^e wheel or playing on y^e harpſicorde

VI Provided Y^e be careful in y^e ſelection of y^e inſtructors for y^e ſeminarie, y^e Head Maſter of which ſhould be a prodigie of Learning as well as of Gentle Ways, one who ſhould think long before he added another ſtudente to his charge and who would ſerve golden ale at frequent ſtudente meetings held mainly on y^e firſt day of y^e week. As for y^e lower Maſters they ſhould be cautioned againſt making too low obeiſance to y^e Head Maſter for ſuche conduct partaketh of Treaſon and its tidings are moſt unwelcome to OUR ROYAL EARS.

VII Provided finally that y^e ſtudents daily attende y^e matins at y^e chapel as becometh good ſubjects. That they alſo keep to their books, nor let themſelves wander aſide allured by y^e ſong of y^e Siren, for it is a ſad loſſe of tyme and of much monies to y^e ſtudente who walketh with y^e College maiden on y^e green and if ſhe is a widow, 'tis but a brief ſpace before he ſhall fynd his way even to y^e Fleet or to y^e mean tavern which is called Y^E SYGNE OF Y^E LONESOME PURSE.

AND FINALLY WE do Grant and agree to theſe patents under our privy ſeal of England, given unto ſuche perſons, their heirs and aſſigns, licenſe for a Seminarie which ſhall be within y^e precincts of y^e Colonie, as is aforeſaid.

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF we have cauſed theſe our letters to be made patent. Witneſs ourſelves, at our Manor of Eaſt Greenwiche, in y^e county of Kent, y^e eighth day of Februarie, in y^e twentie-ſecond year of our reign.

BY WRIT OF Y^E PRIVIE SEAL.

Advice

Ride ye crip courses while ye may,
Old Time is moving on;
And if ye don't ride crips today
The chance may soon be gone.

Dear Geology and Commerce One,
Nor sweet Polities forgetting,
Take crips as they come, one by one
Nor spend your time in fretting.

The course is best which gives you more
Of Life's sweet youth for playing;
So spend no time on German Four,
Take Bible without delaying.

Then study not, but use your wit,
The good crip courses riding,
And among the "summa cums" you'll sit,
Where honors are abiding.

They Also Flunk Who Only Sit and Swear

My son I've travelled around the World,
And many maids I've met.
These are two kinds you should avoid;
The Blonde and the Brunette.

MURAD; "Because they have good shapes and thin wrappers."

If a Baker can loaf three times a day, how much time can a shirt waist?

Next morning it was learned
That twelve of us caught cold.

Sans Raser

It was a scene of such Oriental splendor as but few are fortunate enough to see even once. The walls of the room were made of block after block of polished ivory and they were sloped upward to form a perfect dome. From the very centre of the dome hung a crystal chandelier, the light of which seemed almost supernatural, with such an ineffable pink beauty did it gleam. Rich hangings of gold brocade attempted by their gorgeousness to eclipse the pristine glory of the walls. The floors were made of some substance which glistened and sparkled like a huge mirror. But the climax of the whole thing was the throne of solid gold, so lightly and so gracefully designed that it seemed a poet's song, caught and put into metal; and the occupant of the throne, the exquisite Princess. A dainty creature she was, with skin like rose petals, for smooth white soft beauty, lips of a startling cherry red, a delicate little nose, eyes, wide and innocent, of deep warm blue; black lashed, eyebrows lightly traced and a glorious profusion of golden curls, that in color just matched her royal throne. Looking at her one almost forgot the slender young Prince who was kneeling at her little feet, whose lips were pressing tenderly against her tiny hands.

Yet—Wait; the Princess is about to speak! Her eyes darkened with some mysterious hidden emotion, her dainty red lips open—the Princess speaks;

"Why in Hell don't you make this fool shave, Mike O'Sullivan, before you turn him aloose to come in here and mouth all over me; I have stood a lot from your old Artless Picture Co. but I am thru—contract or no contract."

Sometimes it is expedient to sacrifice a little personal advertisement for the sake of efficiency.

For example:

You call on a sweet young thing every day, for many, many weeks. It grows very tiresome but you know what you are after, so you stick to it. Time drags on and one day you are just about to give it up as a bad job, when:—

SMACK!—The dear girl comes across with a little osculatory recompense.

At last Patience has its reward, but behold:—Before long you and your old Pal pitch a little Stag party, a merry bottle is cracked, and under its confidence invoking influence Y. O. P. complains that Ethelwyna (or Helen or Ethel) sure ain't putting out much these days. Of course you tell him not to despair, and give him several pregnant morsels of advice gained from your recent experience.

He is no dunce!

The next night he calls on Ethelwyna (or Helen or Ethel).

The following afternoon Ethelwyna (or Helen or Ethel) drops in for a little chat with her friend, the sweet shy young thing.

That night you make your daily visit;

BAM!!! CRASH!!!!

As soon as you are up and about again, you look over the field and again choose a sweet shy young thing. You call on her every night, for many, many weeks. . . . . .

Sometimes it is expedient to sacrifice a little personal advertisement for the sake of efficiency.

"How to tie a jazz bow"

Take your tie in one hand and your collar in the other, slip your neck in the collar; and taking the left end of the tie in the right hand, cross your hands over and under and pull. Now reverse hands, taking the right end in the right hand and the left in the left hand. Then with the other hand take the other end, wrap it tightly around the left end and squeeze. Now all you have to do is to untangle your hands and you will have tied, if you followed the directions closely, a neat jazz bow.

A Place I Know

The styles of dresses often change
And show the dainty feet;
And some are trim on well built limbs,
And others, not so neat.

And then again the dresses change,
The fronts are cut real low;
With daring cut—threads hold 'em up
As a curtain at a show.

If you're looking for the styles risque
There is a place I know
Where one may find them any day,—
The Modern Vaudeville Show. . . .

"If"

If you can love a girl and never show it,
Nor let her see she's got you on the run;
If you can act the fool and she not know it—
You've got the jump on most of us, my son.
If you have loved, and never have been jealous,
Not even melancholy—but just bright and gay;
If you can just be mild and not too zealous;
And keep her guessing steady, day by day.
If you can keep your mind upon your business,
And turn off work just like an oiled machine;
If you can be indifferent to the dizziness,
And have your heart take orders from your bean;
If you can play the game in all its phases,
And get the good results that you had planned;
If "she" has never lost you in the mazes,
Nor made you feel like Fido with a can—
If you can do this; fellow, you're a wonder;
You're just the sort of chap we seldom see;
I hope that I'll soon meet you, and by thunder,
I must admit you've got the jump on me.

Rough on Taps

The detective crept stealthily from the doorway of Mrs. Pettigrew's candy store, and pulling his coattails down over his hip pocket to hide what might be there, he shadily crept up the sunny side of the street. Suddenly he halted and stood still; for immediately in front of him was "Railroad" Ruff's office—"A clue!" he exclaimed out loud to himself. Indeed, a clue, for was not the renowned "Railroad" somewhat of a detective as well as a would-be lawyer. Where else would he be so likely to find evidence as in the office of an energetic Commonwealth Attorney?

So nervous was he at the realization that success stared him in the face, and, unlike most people, did not turn away and laugh, that our hero, H. O. Dold, the Egyptian mummy detective, began to perspire freely from what he thought was the nervous strain he was undergoing. Little did the great detective realize that the large beads of perspiration on his noble forehead were caused by his proximity to the exhaust pipe of the Lexington Steam Bakery.

Then and there our hero cast his eyes upward and, as soon as they had come down, he observed the sky overhead was very blue; as is its custom. Nervously, for he had not yet fully recovered from his nervousness, he placed his hand in his pocket, drawing out a somber-colored handkerchief of green, red, and yellow; before he replaced the handkerchief he drew his hand out also, and blew his nose on it.

"The Lexington police force asleep in a chair."

"He found his shadow."

On either side of him he noticed the roses twittering merrily in the tree tops and the sparrows blooming luxuriously on every bush, while at the corner plainly visible to the, even the naked, and that is an unusual sight, eye was the Lexington Police Force asleep in a chair. Slowly he knelt down and began creeping across the street in his usual manner, on his hands and knees. There would be a great deal of dirt but he did this rather than wake the resting Police Force—for were they (beg pardon)—Was he not doing his duty? He was paid to arrest. As our hero coming closer to his goal neared the office of his suspicions a rapping sound was very distinctly heard—"Spirits" he murmured dreamily—"I hope so." For the detective had been very dry since July the first—and especially since the few people he was proud to call "friends" had started to hiding their highballs in low places with Yale locks on the doors. In truth it had been a long time since he had attended a Cellarbration. Quickly he straightened up and leaned his tall form against a nearby post in a seemingly indifferent manner—then he casually began to stroll towards the inner room. Before he had gone the full distance he realized he had

"LEST WE FORGET"—

Gone But Not Forgotten

Did you ever have one of your truest and most beloved friends desert you at a critical moment and in an hour of need? A friend of whom you thought the world and all, and who had always been found faithful and staunch, a friend that had stood the test and was found pure gold. Well, I had such a friend once. I was in Lynchburg at the time that this friend left me so suddenly; but I felt sure I would find him. I searched in vain, and made diligent inquiries but could find no trace. I lost my temper then and cursed this friend for everything I could think of at the time. We had an engagement together that night at Sweetbriar College, and I needed the comfort, solace, and guidance that only a friend of this kind can give in such a strange and wonderful place. I afterwards repented, for the fault had all been mine; I found my collar button, too late, in the cuff of my trousers.

BESS: "I think it is a solemn thing to get married."
ALICE: "Yes; but it's lot more solemn not to."

Fresh: "I have four dollars and I need five. What shall I do?"
Soph: "That's easy. Pawn your four dollars for three dollars and sell the pawn ticket for two dollars"

Editorial

This is the Editorial—You will be glad we told you before it is finished, for the author is not in the habit of authing Editorials; and you will soon realize that too. This Editorial is the funniest thing in this section of the CALYX no doubt; and yet, it is meant to be serious. We have modeled the Humorous Section of this book after the Mink, the new magazine of college wit which has recently appeared on our campus; and personally we think it is far superior to that magazine, and a whiz of a good advertisement for it. But we will leave that for you to judge.

The Editors have worked far more on this than they have on their studies, as any of their professors will testify, and they consider that they were lucky to escape the Automatic. But all told it has been a great experience, for humor is the spice of life; and the men of Washington and Lee have stood behind us to the last, helping with their contributions of art and wit, just as they did when the call for humorists was made by the Mink in its youth, not many moons ago.

We have tried to keep this section free from vulgarity and yet to have spice in it; we have tried to avoid old jokes, and we have attempted to give credit in our own way, to those men we considered worthy. Anything personal we hope will be taken in the spirit in which it was written, humorous. The ones we selected to bring before the eye of the Student Body, and those who read this book, we hope will realize that we have selected them from a number, and will therefore appreciate the compliment paid them.

Below are the names of the men who have made this section what it is—you are the judge —we hope you will like it.

Food for Thought

I have a funny job you know,
I put the address on the Minks;
As a result, "This great big world,
Is not so large, methinks".
One Mink is sent to Vassar,
By a boy who loves a "femme".
A number go to Stuart Hall,
Some more to Southern Sem.
A few go up to Wellesley,
Some others go to Smith.
Some travel South, to Agnes Scott,
Some North to Briarcliff.
Mary Baldwin, Fairfax Hall,
Saint Marys, Lucy Cobb
All get a copy from some boy,
Whose heart with love does throb.
Sweetbriar, Hollins, Sullins,
Randolph Macon, Gunston Hall,
Wesleyan and Shorter get some Minks.
That's not near all,
Why there must be fourteen hundred girls
Who get their "darling Minks"
And there's not but seven hundred boys!
"Sump'ns funny," now methinks.

left his form leaning against the post and returning to get it he stumbled over an object which he had left in the doorway as he entered the dark room—with palsied hands our brave hero lit a match and found his shadow. Naturally such a discovery gave him quite a shock, and he felt the need of a stimulant. So, cautiously reaching in his back pocket he drew forth a bottle of Scott's Emulsion, and after dropping an aspirin tablet into the contents of the bottle he gently replaced the cork and the bottle. Again the great detective heard the rapping, tapping, sound, also a confused murmur, such as can be heard at a Washington and Lee Faculty Meeting. What could be going on? He was reminded by the rapping noise of a poem which is called "The Scarecrow," and, which was written by a University of Virginia man who was very poor, and who according to rumor was an addict to dope.

An idea—Had not this poet been inspired by dope to write his masterpiece? Why could not he under the same influences detect his own masterpiece, and solve the mystery of the rapping?

Accordingly, he acted; hanging a handkerchief around his jaw, and sticking his tongue in his teeth he found himself thoroughly disguised as a sufferer from toothache on a visit to a Dentist. Only after he had walked a block did it occur to him that there was no Dentist's Office in the building he had left. So disconsolately he returned—to figure out a safer method to escape recognition. Aha! Another thought had come in. His disguise was perfect, for anyone seeing him leaving the building would think he was some ignorant advocate of the six months rule, who had entered the wrong building in quest of a molar extractor. A very simple and ignorant looking person would naturally be taken as such, so he walked forth, looking natural.

"Adventures of a Fraternity Pin"

A young man from a cultured home went off to college. While there he became hard up and pawned a suit. Just before going home he managed to get it out of "hock." His mother, in unpacking his trunk, came across the coat with the tag on it.

"John," she asked, "what is this tag on your coat?"

John glibly answered, "Oh, I was at a dance and checked my coat."

A little later she found the trousers with a tag on them.

"John!" she demanded, "what kind of a dance was that?"

It will be of interest to patrons of Washington and Lee, to know that a new and much needed course in Poolology has been added to the curriculum. The eminent authority, Doctor William Higgins, has been selected to fill the chair of this important department, with Mr. Pete Herman as associate professor.

The object of the course is to give to the students a practical and working knowledge of French, English, and Drawing, the mastery of which is the cue to success.

A small laboratory fee will be charged.

I stood in the presence of one of the most noted beauties of all times, and she and I were alone. Such a wonderful woman. Toasted wherever Bacchus reigns, besought by princes, a celebrity, and an incarnation of divine inspiration. And now to me she was holding out her arms and I stood awed. She seemed to beckon me, but in the presence of such beauty I was too entranced to approach. Man never saw more wonderful lips. They smiled. They were alluring. They were intoxicating. I would have moved away, but those eyes followed me. Follow, why they enthralled and blinded me. There was a silent appeal in them. She talked with those eyes, but who could have replied. She could have had my heart and soul; but she was only a picture!

Come, see the railroads backing in,
Come, hear the noise and the din,
The busiest town in old Virgin'
In Lexington.
Come, see the mountains wreathed in mist,
The mud that makes you clench your fist,
The nameless streets that have a twist.
In Lexington.
Come, see the everlasting hills,
The people with their nervous chills,
The place that gives you hook-worm ills.
In Lexington.
Come see the town of before the war,
It woke up once, but will wake no more
Till the angel Gabriel raps at the door
Of Lexington.
'Tis here the council runs the town;
And all the business of renown
Is doing students till they're down.
In Lexington.
And when the census counted head,
It took the living and the dead.
"There is no difference," they said,
"In Lexington."
Come hear the gossips, how they chin,
And how they take the tales right in,
You'll never know until you've been
In Lexington.
This is the place where all the noise
E'en when the baby breaks her toys,
Is blamed upon the W. & L. boys,
It's Lexington. . . .

To the Men Who Hold the Line

(Dedicated to Lindsey Moore)

"Oh, the fullback bows to the cheering crowd,
And the halves, and the quarter, too,
And the praise ascends to the plucky ends
Who fight for the White and Blue;
To none so great do I dedicate
This poor little verse of mine—
But here's to those in the fighting rows,
To the men who hold the line!

"You watch the game and you'll all exclaim:
'Just see that fellow run!'
And you'll shout and roar when the struggle's o'er
That the game was only won
By the fullback's pluck in that splendid buck
That carried him over the goal;
But you didn't see fit to think a bit
Of the man who made the hole.

"Yes, the fullback has his meed of thanks,
And the quarter 'did it all.'
And the halves are praised and a voice is raised
For the ends who took the ball;
Now take your cup and fill it up
To the brim with sparkling wine—
A toast to those in the fighting rows,
To the men who hold the line."

The Beanery Blues

At th' Beanery—at th' Beanery,
They take all of your cash.
They soak you good and hard
An' then they feed you hash.

We get baked potatoes and
Stewed apples, to be sure;
They feed me so much gravy
That my liver's sore.

CHORUS

Oh, I got th' Beanery Blues
I'm as sick as sick can be
They always try to shove
The left-overs off on me.

I'm so sick of eating them
I don't know what to do.
Every time I eat a meal,
I swear that I am through.

The fellows keel right over
Whenever they serve stews—
I know I'm slowly starving—
Oh, I got th' Beanery Blues.

Examinations

Examinations are the prodigy of His Satanic Majesty, the pride of faculties, and the abomination of all right-thinking students.

There are many kinds, being used for every conceivable purpose, and no regular and well governed family is without one. The principal kinds are eugenic, civil service, X-ray, and the great class known as "damn exams."

The first kind is prevalent in the summer, especially around bathing beaches. The second is felt in the fall, when jobs are getting scarce, or the boss starts to require some small amount of actual work. The third class is highly improper and we refuse to discuss it. The fourth starts with a light rush about November first, breaking out in full force just before Christmas, with likelihood of recurrent attacks in March and June.

The kind put out by Washington and Lee fall in the last category, and are of a highly advanced type and very pugnacious, invariably producing much weariness of the flesh, inanity of the spirit, and are always accompanied by an undue amount of profanity, weeping and gnashing of teeth.

It is to be hoped that this pernicious practice will soon be stopped by a constitutional amendment. An organization has been perfected to this end, and results of its campaign are soon to be expected.

There is a theory very prevalent on the campus that the nomenclature of the "Bullet," "Bullet Joe," etc., was derived from our subject's justly renowned exploits on the football field. But this is not the case. Originally Joe had a much longer and much more distinguished nickname, but it was too long and fine for ordinary purposes, and like rye liquor, has been put aside for very special occasions. This title was "The Boy Orator of the Kanawha." Those who have listened to Joe's bursts of eloquence in Joe Long's classes, or at a football rally, and that clarion call to his comrades on the football field, know how well he deserves it. But, as has been said, this nom-de-plume was too cumbersome. Another noticeable peculiarity of Joe's style was that his arguments were convincing no matter what their subject matter. He might casually remark 25-42-38-5, or words to that effect, and before his opponents had started to comprehend his meaning, Joe would be sitting under the goal posts. Or in speaking of love, etc., he has been known to squelch a likely debate by remarking, "Four Queens." Thus since his arguments sped home like a bullet, Joe Silverstein has become popularly known as "Bullet Joe."

No man on the campus has a more deserved place in the hearts of the student body than Joe. Those who have watched him on the football field know one reason, but not the only one. He has identified himself with a progressive athletic policy, and has had his shoulder to the wheel in many of the deserving campus activities.

Above all, Joe is a prince of good fellows. A hearty word for one and all, an engaging frankness, and a willingness to put himself out for fellow students and Alma Mater have deservedly made Joe the campus leader that he is.

This has been a test case in the lower court. By the mutual consent of all parties the case had been submitted to the jury, open to their sole and solemn decree. A straw vote had been taken by the jury and they unanimously declared that the case was well supported. A writ of error is assigned upon the ground that certain of the jury, after a review of the case, had so mis-conducted themselves as to be unable to declare upon the merits of the case.

We, the supreme justices of the land, after a careful review of all the points of the case hold that the jurymen acted only as any normal, prudent man in FULL possession of his faculties would have acted, and we find no error in the spirit of the decision.

Slowly, sinuously, surreptitiously, and silently this vamp wriggled, writhed, worked, and wended her way into my heart. Cute, clever, and cunning was Clarice. As I stood by her side that night we met, and sang that beautiful, blithesome, and blushful ballad, entitled "A kiss is not like gossip because it goes from lip to lip"; I looked upon her with pride as my precious idol of pure and perfect womanhood. She had assumed the sweet, innocent, unsophisticated air of a maid of sixteen who had never been kissed. But now I am aware of her vehement, varying, vicious, vampish and versatile character. So one dark and dreary night I left her sleeping the sleepy sleep of the sleepy. She was my wife, who with her wily and wicked ways had wrought my ruin.

With the awed solemnity of a pilgrim gazing upon the shrine at Mecca we approach the subject of William Olin Burtner. Here he stands as a rock in the wilderness, towering towards the heights like the Statue of Liberty enlightening the world, like—but why go on? Burtner says it is bad English to use mixed metaphors and similes.

Way back in the grim, gray dawn of history a young man entered Washington and Lee and began to annex "A" 's, degrees and things of gold cut in funny shapes. He admitted that he sometimes answered to the appellation of Mr. Burtner, and always has he gone by that name. The assortment of things dangling from his watch chain are not charms to keep away gout, sleeping sickness, etc., but honors conferred by a reverent University upon its prodigy. All freshmen are required to learn the name and meaning of each key which adorns the manly bosom of W. O. This accounts for the "mule" kicking some for their infantile minds cannot absorb both lessons and this long list. However, let no prospective student be deterred from entering W. and L. by these lines for the subject of this history will collect another degree and will depart—it is hinted that he has a suite with private bath awaiting him in the Hall of Fame.

In the first place, we commend him for his work as the executive head of the Student Body, where he has been far more than the average incumbent, for he has really had policies in his head and has carried them out. In the second place, he is not an imitation. He wears a wonderful assortment of keys, and the keys which he wears are for real recognition, not by the choice of a few selective social organizations, but all societies of real worth which recognize worth.

Oh, little flimsy thing whose love of light
Obscures entire the innate dread of pain!
Tell me if thou dost say at every flight,

And if thou dost, thou knowest well, I think,
Thy very nature gives those words the lie,
Tho' narrow thy escapes from ruin's brink.
Thou wilt return as long as thou canst fly.

I revel in the light of true love's eyes,
But flying close I feel the burning pain.
Mine are alternate joys and woeful sighs
That I'll not go so near the flame again.

We two, O moth, are just alike, I think.

Behold our nearest approach to a cosmopolite! If Bill were not trying to lasso Minerva in Texas, he was trying to sandbag her in Chicago, or kidnap her in Colorado. Having hunted the illusive lady in the rock-ribbed fastnesses of the Rockies, the sun-swept plains of the Rio Grande, or in the fetching fragranee of the stockyard, our young hero finally located her among the mountains of Virginia in the heart of the South. Here he laid a systematic siege to the stronghold of learning, resulting in much disaster to the besieged. When it comes to being a student Bill is there.

We might entertain the reader with some of Bill's adventures before coming to W. and L. and mayhap give some explanation of why Bill sings so fervently, "If you could only care, etc." but that wouldn't be fair.

Seriously, though, Bill is a man who has made a unique record here. Not many men have had the distinction of making the Circle in two years. And every man in the student body was glad to see him get it. And then those of you who were wise enough to attend the "Y" meetings Sunday afternoons found a place filled with the essence of good-fellowship. Bill was behind it, pushing and arranging everything. But Bill's largest achievement and the one for which the student body thanks him most is his work with the Troubadours. Bill is an amateur actor of consummate ability, but his work as executive head of the Troubadours is the position in which he has been of the greatest service to the University. It was no small thing that Bill was able to subdue the small jealousies of such an organization so that the members came through with a very successful season. Not to Bill alone is the credit for the Troubadours due, but a very good portion of it should be laid at his door.

University Notes

The trustees and faculty of Washington and Lee have the proud pleasure to announce that a new Department will shortly be added to the curriculum. "We feel that the University should adapt itself to the changing world, so we keep our fingers on the pulse of the Nation," said one who is close to the powers that be, "so finding a need, we have endeavored to supply it in this proposed course." This department will be known as "The Department of Home Brewing and Distilling." There will be one lecture a week and twenty-one hours of laboratory work. Due to the remarkably large endowment which has been subscribed by the alumni, it will be unnecessary to charge a laboratory fee.

You hear on the campus about busy men; sometimes you see men rushing around, apparently very busy, but Troak does not come under either classification. He is really busy. If he isn't writing a Troubadour play, he is attending a fireman's meeting; if he is not directing an orchestra, he is in consultation about matters of importance to the University; if he isn't fixing up records at the Court House, he is initiating somebody into one of the honorary societies at Washington and Lee. There may be some line of college activity that Troak is not in, but if there is, it has not been discovered. He has done everything from editing the CALYX to smoking cigarettes. Troak's career in the Academic School was similar to his present work in every line.

Troak is the type of man who makes Washington and Lee what it ought to be. He has given without stint of his time and service and has been actively identified with the movements which have helped the University. His campus honors, and he has them all, never went to a man more deserving.

No one seemed to recognize him as he slowly went his way in a walk that resembled a run. Soon he was at McCrums, and he found that by removing his tongue from his teeth he could whisper into Bob Funkhouser's ear the name of the dope he craved. Bobby understood, and after receiving the necessary coin, plus war tax, gave him a check, allowing him to imbibe through a greased and waxed paper cylinder the desired stimulant.

When our hero had finished his Coca Cola he felt much more refreshed and equal to the task before him. So he repeated his actions leading to his arrival at the Drug Store; except, remembering he had stuck his tongue in the right cheek coming, it must naturally be in the left one going back, so as to be consistent. Indeed, our hero was not to be caught napping by a mere detail like that.

Next, we find the great detective returning to his post, the same upon which he had formerly leaned his form. And, having an intuition that his clue was still in the nearby room—an intuition strengthened by the incessant murmur and repeated tappings—he curled his six foot three form and dozed away on a footstool.

Detective Dold possessed a very imaginative mind, and even while sleeping, our hero gave birth to thoughts, ideas, and inventions, which would do justice to Edison, Burroughs, Ford, or the inventor of the Automatic Rule of W. & L. Among these ideas were the following: The placing on the market of overcoats to be worn under the vest, fountainless fountain pens, doughnuts without holes, spiritual shoes (ones with departed souls), bristleless hair brushes (for bald men), bureau drawers to be worn in Holland (to match the wooden shoes), and immortal cough drops to keep one from coffin.

The longer he slept the more brilliant became his ideas, and he had just planned a letter to the Blase Motion Picture Company, suggesting featuring a Hawaiian girl in a Shredded Wheat Costume in some of the latest Postum Cereals. Our hero was also working on an idea to prevent sea-sickness, which he expected to suggest to the Side Line Steamship Company, viz., the serving of nothing but lightbread on any of their ships, and thus minimize to a great extent the rolls on the ocean.

Suddenly he was aroused by the sound of an explosion! Jumping up and then down again to enable him to move more swiftly, our brave hero was about to run (for help) when a figure grabbed him, and an apologetic voice said "Sorry to disturb you, but the cork blew out of the bottle of Home Brew we were examining as evidence in a liquor case, and since there is very little evidence left in the case, I would suggest that you come in and help us test it." Our great detective whose motto was "down with liquor" entered the room, and was introduced to all the gentlemen present including some members of the Committee on Social Functions and our Registrar, and then preceded to business, proving to all that his motto was well selected.

During this time the host was pacing back and forth, nervously watching his private stock disappear, all the while tapping on the floor with a light walking cane. The rest is self-explanatory. Need we continue? Our hero has solved the mystery.

Discovery

The books are full of knowledge gained
Through years of toil and inspiration;
They teach success is e'er attained
By pluck and sheer determination.
In them we read strange tales about
Discoveries and great inventions
Achieved by men who would not doubt,
Despite sore trials and dissensions.

When Cap. Columbus crossed the sea
And paid America a visit,
He wrote his name in history,
Altho' it seems he could not miss it.
Since then the earth has been surveyed
In every clime and every section,
And numberless improvements made,
A most astonishing collection.

I give all praise to him who showed
The reason for the falling apple;
A debt of gratitude is owed
The person who discovered scrapple.
Yea, miracles through all the years
Have caused the world to stare and wonder;
In sooth, a genius oft appears
Who bids the skeptics, "Go to thunder!"

Henceforth, I modestly lay claim
To rank among the chief inventors;
I have a strangle-hold on fame—
Which fact may find a few dissenters.
Without foundation were our fears;
Our theories were but surmises;
I've learned that women do have ears,
One of the century's surprises.

Appreciation

IN bringing the CALYX 1921 to a close, the Editor and Manager wish to pay a tribute of thanks and appreciation to those to whom honor is due for whatever success this book may merit. It is true that the staff have worked and worked hard for a "best" CALYX, and yet only a mediocre book at best would have resulted were it not for the help, and contributions from those on the outside.

To White Studio we offer our sincere thanks for their co-operation and especially for the quality of the work done this year. We wish to thank the Editor and Manager of the Ring-tum Phi for their courtesy and help in giving publicity to the Annual.

The "Beauty Section," herein designated as the "Varsity Vamps" owes its charm to the young ladies who so kindly submitted their photographs to beautify the section. We wish to thank them.

The Troubadours worked up their own presentation and in that way gave great assistance to the Editor in making that part of the book attractive.

Perhaps the greatest contribution to this year's Annual, and that which in the mind of the Editor deserves the most credit is the art work submitted by Mr. Clifford Boyd Hartley, of Chattanooga, Tenn. Mr. Hartley was a student at Washington and Lee in the year 1917-18. Since that time he has devoted his time to Commercial Art. To him are the color plates in this CALYX due. We wish to thank Mr. N. J. Waugh and Mr. L. H. Browder of Danville for the Class plates which they very kindly furnished. To Messers. Hartley, Waugh, and Browder, should go the credit for practically all the art work in the book.

Finally we wish to express our appreciation to the firm of Baker, Jones, Hausauer, Inc., of Buffalo, N. Y., the producers of this book, for their unfailing courtesy, timely aid and suggestions, and co-operation at all times for whatever of merit our readers may discover in this annual, The CALYX 1921.

The aim of the Editors and all connected with the Annual this year has been to produce a first class representative publication for the students of Washington and Lee University; to present nothing which may mar the fair name of our Alma Mater; to furnish the best advertisement to the world at large for the University; and to leave behind a book of memories which shall always be a joy in after years.

He was a foe without hate,
A friend without reproach,
A Christian without hyprocrisy,
A man without guile.
He was a Caesar without his ambition,
A Frederick without his tyranny,
A Napoleon without his selfishness,
A Washington without his reward.

He was as obedient to authority as a servant and royal in authority as a true king. He was as gentle as a woman in his life, modest and pure as a virgin in thought, watchful as a Roman vestal in duty, submissive to law as Socrates, and grand in battle as Achilles." Tribute to Lee by Senator Hill, South Carolina.

Memory

Like music of some half-forgotten song,
Heard in a happy, happy long-ago,
Whose melody has lingered, liquid low—
Whose sweetness with the years grows ever strong;

Like glory of some rare old painting's glow,
On which the tints and tones of age belong—
And bloom in mellow richness, sure and long,
Where Time's strange witchery bids beauty blow;

Like precious joy we feel, when in the night
The fragrance falling from a simple flower,
Or odor stolen from a hidden bower,
Recalls the dream of some sweet, past delight;

So the years with happy memories dower
Our college days, and with our failing sight,
In Memory's heart of hearts they bring more light
Than all the newer joys that on us shower.

What Is Research?

SUPPOSE that a stove burns too much coal for the amount of heat that it radiates. The manufacturer hires a man familiar with the principles of combustion and heat radiation to make experiments which will indicate desirable changes in design. The stove selected as the most efficient is the result of research.

Suppose that you want to make a ruby in a factory—not a mere imitation, but a real ruby, indistinguishable by any chemical or physical test from the natural stone. You begin by analyzing rubies chemically and physically. Then you try to make rubies just as nature did, with the same chemicals and under similar conditions. Your rubies are the result of research—research of a different type from that required to improve the stove.

Suppose, as you melted up your chemicals to produce rubies and experimented with high temperatures, you began to wonder how hot the earth must have been millions of years ago when rubies were first crystallized, and what were the forces at play that made this planet what it is. You begin an investigation that leads you far from rubies and causes you to formulate theories to explain how the earth, and, for that matter, how the whole solar system was created. That would be research of a still different type—pioneering into the unknown to satisfy an insatiable curiosity.

Research of all three types is conducted in the Laboratories of the General Electric Company. But it is the third type of research—pioneering into the unknown—that means most, in the long run, even though it is undertaken with no practical benefit in view.

At the present time, for example, the Research Laboratories of the General Electric Company are exploring matter with X-rays in order to discover not only how the atoms in different substances are arranged but how the atoms themselves are built up. The more you know about a substance, the more you can do with it. Some day this X-ray work will enable scientists to answer more definitely than they can now the question: Why is iron magnetic? And then the electrical industry will take a great step forward, and more real progress will be made in five years than can be made in a century of experimenting with existing electrical apparatus.

You can add wings and stories to an old house. But to build a new house, you must begin with the foundation.

¶ Our Soda Fountain is unique in this Community

¶ Students congregate there day and night:

¶ Because the drinks, the ice cream, the sandwiches, the cake, the pies, continuously attract them.

¶ Because it is there they are most apt to meet their friends.

¶ Because it is there they hear first what has happened, whether it is a bit of social gossip or the returns from the latest athletic event.

Beautiful forms and compositions are not made by chance, nor can they ever, in any material, be made at small expense.

A composition for cheapness and not for excellence of workmanship, is the most frequent and certain cause of the rapid decay and entire destruction of arts and manufactures.

—Ruskin

OUR claim to your consideration lies in the fact that we have applied to our own business the thought contained in this quotation from one of the world's greatest thinkers and practical workers.

If there is anything attractive beyond the ordinary, in the page arrangement, cover decoration, presswork, and general harmony which distinguish our work, be assured it has not been due to chance.

We leave nothing to chance. Every line, page, volume, as it comes from our establishment, is the result of a carefully laid, conscientiously executed plan.

The thought and the supervision which our system provides is your guarantee of excellence.

If you have anything to be printed, write us; if we undertake it, we will do it well.
